Soc., teacher of organ and theory at the Scharwenka-Klindworth Cons., and (from 1895) org. at the Kaiser Wilhelm-Gedächtniskirche; made Kgl. Prof. in 1897. He was an eminent mus. critic (on the 'Allgem. musikalische Zeitung'), an excellent organist, a composer of organ-sonatas and -studies, etc., and a writer of distinction: Biography of Schumann (1887); Zur Theorie und Geschichte der byzantinischen Musik (in the 'Vierteljahrsschrift für Musikwissenschaft,' 1889); Joh. Brahms (1897; 3d ed. 1903; in 'Berühmte Musiker,' of which series he was editor); Musikalische Rückblicke (2 vols., 1900); H. von Bülow (1909, posth.); J. S. Bach (1912; completed by B. St. with Prof. Spengel in Hamburg, Georg Henschel and Raymond von zur Mühlen in London, and Jean Criticos in Paris. Début as Max (Freischütz) in Hamburg, 1902; the success he achieved shortly afterwards in Lorenz's oratorio Krösus determined him to devote himself to oratorio and Lieder-singing; has toured Germany, France, England, Russia, Scandinavia, the Balkan States, etc.; since his first tour of the U. S. (1913) he has been a regular visitor. For some years he lived in Berlin as a member of the 'Berliner Vokal-Quartett' (Jeannette Grumbacher de Jong, Therese Schnabel-Behr, R., and Artur von Eweyck), renowned for their interpretation of Brahms's vocal quartets.

Rei'necke, Karl (Heinrich Carsten), b. Altona, June 23, 1824; d. Leipzig, March 10, 1910. Pianist, pupil of his father, a music-teacher. His first concert-tour was to Denmark and Sweden in 1843; he then went to Leipzig, learned much through intercourse with Mendelssohn and Schumann, made a second tour through North Germany, and was from 1846–8 court pianist to Christian VIII at Copenhagen. Then, after spending some years in Paris, he became teacher at Cologne Cons. in 1851, mus. director at Barmen 1854–9, academical mus. dir. and cond. of the Singakademie at Breslau 1859–60, and from 1860–95 cond. (following J. Rietz) of the Gewandhaus Concerts at Leipzig, his successor being Nikisch. At the same time he was app. prof. of pf.-playing and free composition at the Leipzig Cons. and in 1897 he was made 'Studiendirektor' at that institution. He retired in 1902. From Leipzig Univ. he had the title of Dr. phil. (hon. causa); from the King of Saxony, that of 'Royal Professor.' An eminent pianist, he excelled as an interpreter of Mozart, made concert-tours almost yearly, and was enthusiastically welcomed in England, Holland, Scandinavia, Switzerland, and throughout Germany; among his pupils were Maas, Kwast, Winding, Joseffy, Dora Schirmacher, and Jeanne Becker. As a composer, and teacher of composition, R. was the leader in Leipzig for a quarter of a century; his works, classic in form and of a refined workmanship, have a distinct dash of romantic temperament. Although his sympathies were almost exclusively with the classicists (his favorite was Mozart), he could not entirely escape from the influence of Wagner and Brahms. In his writings he showed himself an extreme conservative. Besides the Leipzig letters for the 'Monthly Musical Record' and essays for various journals, he wrote Was sollen wir spielen? (1886), Zur Wiederbelebung der Mozartschen Klavierkonzerte (1891), Die Beethovenschen Klaviersonaten (1897; 6th ed. 1912; Engl. tr. 1898), Und manche liebe Schatten steigen auf (1900), Meister der Tonkunst (1903), Aus dem Reich der Töne (1907).—Cf. On Dec. 23, 1901, he made his Amer. début at the M. O. H. in the minor rôles of the Sailor and Shepherd in Tristan und Isolde, but his sterling qualities were quickly appreciated, and before the end of the season he was given more important parts; his interpretations of David (Meistersinger, Jan. 24, 1902) and Mime (Siegfried,

Mar. 4) were particularly striking; in fact, since then no other artist has been heard in these parts at the M. O. H., where he has sung uninterruptedly to the present day (1917); during the summer months he has also appeared at Cov. Garden and at the principal German opera houses. He created the rôles of Nick in Puccini's Fanciulla del West (M. O. Y. Mozart's Bastien und Bastiennne and Der Schauspieldirektor (in Engl., himself singing the rôles of Bastien and Mozart, resp.), the latter work having its Amer. première on that occasion [the former had been introduced (in Ger.) to America under the auspices of the the MacDowell Club, N. Y., Nov. 17, 1914]. The experiment proved so successful that 4 repetitions had to be given; in the spring of 1917 (May 7–19) R. gave a 2-weeks' season of intimate light opera (also in Engl.) at the Lyceum Th. in N. Y., repeating the Mozart works, and bringing out for the first time in America Pergolesi's La Serva Padrona and Donizetti's Il Campanello di Notte (both May 7), and Gounod's Le Docteur Miracle (May 10). In 1824, at the expense of the Prussian government, he made a tour of inspection and study in Italy, and submitted a plan for a conservatory; taught at the Berlin R. In 1524 he establ. a music-printing business at Wittenberg, publishing more especially Protestant compositions (the 'Bicinia gallica,' 1544, contains the earliest known version of the Ranz des vaches). Wrote an Enchiridion musices (Part i, 1518, on Musica choralis; P. ii, 1520, on Mus. mensuralis).—See Q.-Lex.

Rhein'berger, Josef (Gabriel), b. Vaduz, Liechtenstein, Mar. 17, 1839; d. Munich, Nov. 25, 1901. He played the piano at 5, and was a good organist at 7. Until 1850 he cont. study with Ph. Schmutzer in Feldkirch; then ent. the Munich Cons., where from 1851–4 he st. pf. with J. E. Leonhard, org. with J. G. Herzog, and comp. with J. J. Maier. After graduating with the highest honors he st. further with Franz Lachner, earning his livelihood with private lessons and acting as accompanist of the Munich Gesangverein, of which he became cond. in 1864 (producing oratorios and other choral works); from 1860–6 he was org. at St. Michael's, and from 1865–7 Repetitor at the Hofoper. In 1859 he succ. his teacher Leonhard as teacher of pf. at the Cons.; 1860, app. prof. of comp. (later also of organ). When Bülow completely reorganized the institution (1867) as the 'Kgl. Akademie der Tonkunst,' R. retained his professorship, and also was made inspector of the instrl. and theory classes, positions filled with signal distinction until his death. In 1877 he declined an invitation to become dir. of the newly founded Hoch

Cons. in Frankfort. For this act of loyalty he was app. Wüllner's succ. (with the title of Kgl. Hofkapellm.) as cond. of the 'Kgl. Kapellchor,' celebrated for its performances of early music, and King Ludwig made him Knight of St. Michael; the bestowal of the 'Zivil-Verdienstorden' in 1894 raised him to the rank of the nobility, and the Univ. of Munich made him Dr. phil. (hon. c.) in 1899; he also was elected member of the Berlin Akademie.—As a teacher R.'s reputation was second to none; pupils flocked to him from all parts of the world. As a composer he just falls short of greatness; he never rises to the height of passion and only occasionally does he touch the strings of real emotion. Nevertheless, his dignity, formal finish, and consummate technical mastery, compel respect and admiration. The 20 organ-sonatas are undoubtedly his highest achievement, and must be ranked among the greatest works in organ literature.—Cf. Th. Kroyer's necrology in Bettelheim's 'Jahrbuch' (1901); P. Molitor, J. R. und seine Kompositionen für die Orgel (Leipzig, 1904).

Th. Italien, Paris, in 1844. He was invited to Petrograd in 1853 as musical director of the Imperial theatres; in 1866 the fine comic opera Crispino e la comare had a warm welcome at the Th. Richter, Hans, celebrated conductor; born Raab, Hungary, April 4, 1843; d. Bayreuth, Dec. 5, 1916. In 1853, choirboy in the Court Chapel, Vienna; from 1860–5 he studied comp. under Sechter, vl. under Heissler, and the French horn under Kleinecke at the Cons. From 1862–6, horn-player in the orch. at the Kärnthnerthor-Th.; from 1866–7 in Lucerne (Triebschen) with Wagner, making for him a fair copy of the Meistersinger score, and recommended by him for the position of chorusmaster at the Munich Opera (Dec., 1867); from Aug. 25, 1868, to Sept. 1, 1869, court cond. under v. Bülow. Conducted rehearsals and initial performances of Lohengrin at Brussels, Mar. 22, 1870; after ten months more at Triebschen he was app. Kapellm. at the Pest National Th. 1871–5, then succeeding Dessoff as Kapellm. at the Imperial Opera, Vienna, becoming 1st Kapellm. on Hellmesberger's death in 1893. From 1875–97 he conducted, concurrently with the opera, the concerts of the Vienna Philh. Soc., and from 1880–95 he also cond. the concerts of the 'Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde,' excepting the season of 1883–4, when Jahn was his deputy. He was chosen by Wagner to conduct the Ring des Nibelungen at Bayreuth in 1876, and at the close of the festival was decorated with the Maximiliansorden by the King of Bavaria and the Falkenorden by the Grand Duke of Weimar. In 1877 (May 7–19) he cond., alternately with the master himself, the great Wagner Festival at Albert Hall, London. The success of a second festival (May 5–12, 1879), cond. by R. alone, led to the establishment of an annual series in May, known at first as 'Orchl. Fest. Concerts,' later simply as 'R. Concerts,' which were given regularly until 1897. In that year R. settled definitely in Manchester as cond. of the Symph. (Hallé) Orch., but did not by any means limit his activity to that city; he still gave occasional 'R. Concerts' in London, and was regular cond. of the Birmingham Fest. (1885–1911) and of the season of Wagner opera at Cov. Garden (1903–10); in 1882 he cond. at Drury Lane the Engl. premières of Meistersinger (May 30) and Tristan und Isolde (June 20); was cond. of the Lower Rhenish Fest. in 1888, '89, '91, and '97. Throughout his life he remained in closest touch with Bayreuth, spending a part of every summer there as cond.-in-chief of the festivals. The last orchl. concert he conducted was his farewell-concert with the Manchester Symph. Orch. on April 11, 1911, having bidden farewell to London the day before at a special concert of the London Symph. Orch.; he then directed a few performances at the Hofoper in Vienna, and after directing with all the fire of youth the superb Meistersinger performances at Bayreuth in the summer of 1912 he retired from all activities, spending his last years in Bayreuth. Among the world's conductors the figure of R. is one of the most imposing. A pioneer and unsurpassed interpreter of Wagner's art, he espoused with equal devotion the cause of Brahms, the majority of whose orchl. works had their first performance in Vienna (and later also in England) under R.'s baton. A musician of universal sympathies and master of all styles, his interpretation of classic or modern works was equally convincing and authoritative.—Cf. F. Klickmann, Dr. H. R., in 'Windsor Magazine' (Sept., 1896); also 'M. T.' (July, 1899).

Richter, Johann Christian Christoph, father of Jean Paul Friedrich Richter; b. Neustadt am Kulm, Dec. 16, 1727; d. Schwarzenbach-on-Saale, 1779, as pastor. Ricor'di & Co., G., famous music-publishing firm in Milan; founded by Giovanni R., b. Milan, 1785; d. there March 15, 1853. At first violinist and cond. at the old Fiando theatre, he also earned small sums as a music-copyist, and in 1807 went to Leipzig to learn music-engraving in Breitkopf & Härtel's establishment. Returning, he opened a little shop, and began publishing in 1808, the first works being engraved by himself. He was an intimate of Rossini, whose operas he published; also recognized Verdi's genius when the latter was still unknown. His son Tito (b. Milan, Oct. 29, 1811; d. there Sept. 7, 1888) succeeded to the business. In 1845 he establ. the 'Gazzetta Musicale,' one of the most important Ital. musical papers; also introduced the 'Edizioni economiche,' and under his able administration the house became the largest music-publishing firm in Italy. With Verdi he was on terms of intimate friendship, and that composer's works (especially Aida) made a fortune for both publisher and author. Owing to ill health he withdrew from active management in 1887.—His successor was his son Giulio (b. Milan, Dec. 19, 1840; d. there June 6, 1912), a man of extraordinary business ability, who continued the policy of expansion. In 1888 he bought, and consolidated with his own, the important firm of Francesco Lucca, thus bringing the number of publications to 100,000; he discovered Puccini, the immense success of whose works enabled him to become practically the dictator of the policies of the principal opera houses in Europe and America as far as the Italian répertoire was concerned. A trained musician, he publ., under the pseudonym of J. Burgmein, much elegant salon-music (160 opus numbers), Fan- taisie hongroise for orch., a str.-quartet in G (Basevi Prize, 1864), a pf.-trio, etc.; also wrote a ballet, Un Capriccio (with Marco Sala; La Scala, 1866). Until his death (when it ceased publication) he was ed. of the 'Gazzetta Musicale'.—His son Tito, a remarkable pianist, is the present head of the house. The catalogue to-day (1917) contains 116,000 numbers, and in the archives are the autograph scores of more than 500 operas by the most famous Italian composers.

Torrens of Chicago and Theo. J. Toedt of New York. Début in Handel's Messiah, Nov. 24, 1904, with the St. Louis Choral-Symph. Soc.; the following May she appeared as soloist at the Cincinnati Fest., and has been reëngaged for every succeeding fest., excepting in 1908, when she was in Europe; has likewise sung in The Messiah with the N. Y. Oratorio Soc. almost every season since 1905. While on a pleasure-trip in Europe (1907) she was offered a 3-year contract at Cov. Garden, where she made her operatic début as Micaëla (July 7, 1908), and also sang Mimi and Zerlina; in spite of emphatic success the stage did not attract her, and after release from her contract she returned to America. In 1909 she was eng. at a salary of $5,000 a year as soloist at the First Ch. of Christ, Scientist, N. Y. (one solo every Sunday for 9 months), but after 2 years was obliged to resign owing to the increasing demands for her services by the large choral and orchl. societies throughout the U. S. She is also recognized as one of the foremost Lieder-singers of to-day; her joint-recitals (in duets) with Claude Cunningham (bar.) have won unqualified praise.

Rie'del, Karl, b. Kronenberg, n. Elberfeld, Oct. 6, 1827; d. Leipzig, June 3, 1888. A silk-dyer by trade, the Revolution of 1848 upset his business, and turned his thoughts to the serious study of music. He became a pupil of Carl Wilhelm at Krefeld, and entered the Leipzig Cons. in 1849. In 1854 he organized the 'Riedelverein,' a singing-society which later became famous, for the performance of ancient church-music. The first public concert was given in 1855; in 1859 his fine mixed chorus successfully performed Bach's mass in B minor. On Brendel's death in 1868, R. was elected president of the 'Allgemeiner deutscher Musikverein,' and founded the Leipzig branch ('Zweigverein'). A powerful advocate of the Wagner Festivals, he also became president of the 'Wagnerverein.' The Duke of Altenburg conferred on R. the title of 'Professor' in 1868; Leipzig University created him Dr. phil. (hon. c.) in 1883.—Even after its founder's death the 'Riedelverein' maintained its reputation as one of the finest choral organizations in Germany; successive conds. were H. Kretzschmar (1888–97), K. Göhler (1897–1907 and 1909–13); since then R. Wetz.—His publ. works include only a few songs and part-songs. Franck's Geistliche Melodien, Eccard's Preussische Festlieder, Praetorius's Weihnachtslieder, show the hand of a master. —Cf. A. Rie'mann, (Karl Wilhelm Julius) Hugo, distinguished musicologist and teacher; b. Grossmehlra, n. Sondershausen, July 18, 1849. He was trained in theory by Frankenberger at Sondershausen, studying the piano with Barthel and Ratzenberger; took the gymnasial course in the Rossleben 'Klosterschule,' 1865–8, and studied at first law, then philosophy and history, at Berlin and Tübingen; and, after passing through the campaign of 1870–1, entered the Leipzig Cons. In 1873 he took the degree of Dr. phil. at Göttingen with the dissertation Musikalische Logik (publ.); was active as a cond. and teacher at Bielefeld until 1878, when he qualified as University lecturer on music at Leipzig; taught music at Bromberg 1880–1, then at the Hamburg Cons. till 1890, at the Sondershausen Cons. for a short time, and at the Wiesbaden Cons. until 1895, when he resumed his lectures at Leipzig. In 1901 he was made prof. extraord., in 1905 regular prof.; in 1908 dir. of the newly establ. 'Collegium Musicum,' and in 1914 also dir. of the newly establ. 'Forschungsinstitut für Musikwissenschaft.' He was elected honorary member of the Cecilia Acad. at Rome (1887), of the Royal Inst. at Florence (1894), and of the Musical Assoc. in London (1900); made Mus. Doc. (hon. c.) by the Univ. of Edinburgh (1899). On his 60th birthday he was honored by the publication of a 'Festschrift' (ed. by Karl Mennicke) containing contributions from the world's foremost scholars, many of whom were R.'s personal pupils.—The mere bulk of R.'s writings, covering every branch of musical science, constitutes a monument of indefatigable industry, and is proof of enormous concentration and capacity for work. When one takes into consideration that much of this work is the result of painstaking, accurate research and of original, often revolutionary, thinking, respect and admiration may well pass into a feeling of wonder. His works treating of harmony constitute to-day the foundation of modern musical theory. By reducing to a system all the important discoveries of Zarlino, Tartini, Rameau, Gottfried Weber, Fétis, Hauptmann, Helmholtz, and von Öttingen, he freed harmony from the trammels of thorough-bass, substituted simple fundamental laws for empirical formulas, and bridged the gap that had always existed between theory and practice. Stimulated by Westphal's investigations, he turned his attention to the matter of phrasing, with the result that he established that important (until then sadly neglected) discipline upon a sound scientific basis. The principles laid down in several books dealing with this subject he applied in his numerous and very valuable 'Phrasierungsausgaben' of pf.-compositions of early, classic, and romantic masters. His researches in the field of mus. history have solved a number of vexed problems, and thrown light on others. And, finally, in formulating the new science of musicology (Musikwissenschaft) the labors of R. have been a most important factor.—Cf. the biogr. sketch by K. Mennicke in 'R.-Festschrift' (Leipzig, 1909); R. Heuler, Dr. H. R. als Volksschulgesangpädagog, in 'Sonde' (Würzburg, 1910).

Rimbault, Edward Francis, distinguished writer and editor; b. London, June 13, 1816; d. there Sept. 26, 1876. From youth a student of mus. history and literature, he began giving lectures on English musical history in 1838; in 1840 he founded, with E. Taylor and W. He was in great request as a lecturer (at the Royal Inst.; at the Collegiate Inst., Liverpool; the Philosophic Inst., Edinburgh; etc.); between lecturing and editorial work, his time was so fully occupied that he had little leisure for composition, producing only small stage-pieces (The Fair Maid of Islington [London, 1838] and The Castle Spectre [ib., 1839]), a cantata, Country Life, part-songs, and various songs, of which Happy Land remains the popular favorite.—Writings: Who was Jack Wilson, the singer of Shakespeare's stage? (1846, attempt to prove him identical w. Rimsky-Kor'sakov, Nikolai Andreyevitch, b. Tichvin, Govt. of Novgorod, March 18, 1844; d. Liubensk, n. Petrograd, June 21, 1908. His musical talent showed itself at an early age, so that at 6 he received regular pf.-lessons, and at 9 began to compose. But his parents, belonging to the aristocracy, destined him for a military career, and sent him in 1856 to the Naval Academy in Petrograd. Nevertheless, music was not neglected; in his spare time the young man studied the 'cello with Ulich and piano with Fedor Kanille, an excellent musician. In 1861 he made the acquaintance of Balakirev, the leader of the Neo-Russians, who introduced him to the other principals of the circle (Mussorgsky, Borodin and Cui). Until that time R.-K. had never thought of music as a profession, but his close association with the leaders of the new movement for a national art fired his enthusiasm, and under Balakirev's direction he began serious theoretical study; but after graduation from the Academy, he was ordered on a cruise around the world (1862–5). During this time he composed his op. 1, a symphony in E♭ m. (the first work in that form written by a Russian composer), each movement of which, as soon as it was completed, he sent to Balakirev for advice. Under the latter's direction the work was prod. in Petrograd (Dec., 1865), immediately after the composer's return, and met with considerable favor. A number of very fine songs (op. 2, 3, 4, 7), a symph. poem, Sadko (the first written by a Russian composer), and a fantasy for orch. (on Serbian themes) made him locally famous. Shortly after his app. as dir. of the Petrograd Cons., Asantchevsky offered R.-K. the professorship for comp. and instrumentation at that institution, which the latter accepted in 1871, and filled with distinction till his death. Repeated offers of the directorship of the Petrograd and Moscow conservatories he persistently declined. Realizing soon after his appointment the insufficiency of his technical equipment, he subjected himself to a severe course of self-training (especially in fugue) until he had attained consummate mastery. In 1873 he definitely resigned from the navy, but accepted the post of inspector of the marine bands, which position he held until its abolition in 1884. From 1874–81 he was cond. of the concerts of the Free Music-School (succ. Balakirev); 1886–90, of the Russian Symph. Concerts founded (1885) by Beliaiev (q. v.); 1883–94, Balakirev's asst. as cond. of the Imp. Court Chapel; also appeared as cond. of Russian music outside of Russia, with a notable success at the Paris Expos. (1889) and in Brussels (1890, 1900).—R.-K. occupies a prominent place among the great Russian composers, his influence in the spreading of knowledge and appreciation of the national art outside of Russia being second only to that of Tchaikovsky. His genius finds its fullest expression in the free forms of the symphonic poem and in dramatic music. In the former field he is a follower of Liszt as far as artistic principles and ideals are concerned, but thoroughly individual in his treatment, especially in the instrumentation. In this respect his works may well serve as models for idiomatic treatment of the individual instruments, artistic blending of timbres, wise economy of means, and original, beautiful effects. [Mussorgsky's Boris Godunov did not become a fixture in the Russian répertoire until after its complete re-orchestration by R.-K.] The operas exhibit fine power of characterization and an astonishing variety of style, which is conditioned by the nature of the subject. With but two exceptions (Mozart and Salieri, Servilia) Russian legend and history have been the sources of inspiration. For the greater number of his dramatic works he wrote his own texts, which are skilfully constructed and possess literary merit. As a song-writer his place is also high, although here his gift for melodic invention appears to be inferior to his other excellent qualities; their chief interest lies in the rich and finely wrought piano-part. In almost all works he makes masterly use of the wealth of Russian folk-melodies.—BIBLIOGRAPHY: [In Russian] V. Yastrebtsiev, N. A. R.-K. (Petrograd, 1900; 2d ed. Before that he had publ. various essays setting forth his ideas on the relation between metrical and musical accent, and these translations (publ. by Litolff) may be regarded as a successful demonstration of his theories. Ro'senthal, Moriz, famous pianist; born Lemberg, Dec. 19, 1862 [correct date; in autograph letter to Ed.]. He received his first instruction on the pf. from a local teacher, Galath (1869-72). Attracted by the boy's precocity, Karl Mikuli, Chopin's pupil and dir. of the Lemberg Cons., undertook his musical education; in 1872 he played with him in public Chopin's Rondo in C for 2 pfs. In 1875, after his parents' removal to Vienna, R. became a pupil of R. Joseffy, who taught him according to Tausig's method. His début at Vienna in 1876 (Chopin's F minor concerto, Beethoven's 32 vars., pieces by Mendelssohn and Liszt) was followed by a phenomenally successful tour of Rumania, at the end of which the youthful virtuoso was made 'R. court pianist' by the king; from 1876-8 he st.

with Liszt in Weimar and Rome, but even after the completion of his regular studies he remained in constant touch with the master. As Liszt's pupil he created a sensation in Paris and Petrograd in 1878. He then withdrew for six years from the concert-stage, took the classical course at the Staatsgymnasium in Vienna, and st. philosophy (von Zimmermann and F. Brentano) and esthetics (Hanslick) at the Univ.; at the same time he kept up his practice on the pf. When he reappeared in Vienna in 1884 his stupendous technic and almost incredible physical endurance fairly bewildered his hearers, and the critics declared him the greatest living technician; since then he has concertized with immense success in all the principal cities of Europe and America. Almost everywhere the first impression of his playing was similar to that produced in Vienna; but after the first wonder had subsided it was discovered that the artist's transcendent technic is only a legitimate means of expression, never an end in itself. A player of individual conception, intellectual power and keen penetration, R. is universally acknowledged as one of the world's greatest pianists. He has made 4 triumphal tours of the U. S., 1887–8, 1896–7 (cut short by a serious illness), 1898–9, 1906–7. In 1912 he was made 'k. k. Kammervirtuose' to the Emperor of Austria; lives in Vienna. Has publ. a study on Chopin's waltz (op. 64, No. 1; several original comps. for pf. (Prélude, Romanze, Variationen über ein eigenes Thema, etc.); and (with L. Ros'si, Gaetano, b. Verona, 1780; d. there Jan. 27, 1855. For many years he was attached to the Fenice Th. at Venice as dramatic poet. He wrote over 100 libretti, among them Linda di Chamounix and Maria Padilla, for Donizetti; La Prova d'un' opera seria, for Gnecco; Il Giuramento, for Mercadante; Il Crociato in Egitto, for Meyerbeer; Tancredi and Semiramide, for Rossini.

Ros'si, Giovanni Battista, Genoese monk.—Publ. Organo de' cantori per intendere da se stesso ogni passo difficile che si trova nella musica (1618; elucidates certain phases of mensural notation).

Ros'si, Giovanni Gaetano, b. Borgo S. Donnino, Parma, Aug. 5, 1828; d. Genoa, Mar. 30, 1886. From 1873–9, maestro at the Carlo Felice Th., Genoa; then Director of the Liceo Musicale.—Works: 4 operas, Elena di Taranto (Parma, 1852), Giovanni Giscala (ib. 1855), Nicolò de' Lapi (Ancona, 1865), La Contessa d'Altenberg (Borgo San Donnino, 1871); an oratorio, Le sette parole; overture to the tragedy Saulo (prize from the Soc. del Quartetto, Milan); a Requiem, 3 masses, etc.

Ros'si, Giulio, dramatic basso cantante; b. Rome, Oct. 27, 1865. At 20 he began vocal study under maestro Oreste Tomassoni, chorister in the Sistine Chapel; début Oct. 20, 1887, at Parma in the operas Ione (Petrella) and L'Ebrea (Appolloni). In 1888 he sang at Odessa; in 1889, toured South America with Patti, and also appeared in London; 1890 at La Scala, Milan, singing the rôle of Marcello (Huguenots), and sang there 3 seasons; also 3 seasons at the Royal Th., Madrid, 2 at the Liceo, Barcelona, and 4 in Petrograd; 6 in South America (Rio, Buenos Aires, Chili), 3 in Mexico, a tour of the U. S., and 2 tours of Mexico and California with the Tetrazzini; from 1908–13 he sang at the M. O. H. His repertory includes no less than 80 operas (in Italian); favorite rôles are Marcello (Huguenots), Cardinal (L'Ebrea), Leporello (Don Giovanni), Count (Nozze di Figaro), Duke (Lucrezia Borgia), Filippo II (Don Carlos), Basilio (Barbiere), Freschi (Simon Boccanegra), Plunkett (Martha), Mefistofele (Faust), Daland (Vascello fantasma), Hagen (Crepuscolo degli Dei); he has created the bass rôles in Cristoforo Colombo and Fior d'Alpi (Franchetti), Guglielmo Ratcliff (Mascagni), and Savitri (Canti). His voice is a powerful and flexible basso cantante of wide range, with profondo register; at 19 it was a tenor, but became a low bass after a three weeks' illness following an unintentional bath in the Tiber in December. In 1889 he was rescued with difficulty from the fifth floor of a house in Savona split in twain by the earthquake. He has crossed the ocean some 30 times, coming safely through an epidemic, a fire, and various storms. In 1893, during the revolution in Brazil, he was conscripted in Rio Janeiro, by a squad of soldiers and obliged to fight, gun in hand, at the Arsenal against the naval forces; next year, at the same place, he barely escaped with his life from a fire which broke out in the theatre during a performance.

Ros'si, Lauro, celebrated dramatic comp.; b. Macerata, Feb. 19, 1810; d. Cremona, May 5, 1885. Pupil of Furno, Zingarelli and Crescentini at the R. Coll. di S. Sebastiano, Naples, graduating 1829, bringing out a buffo opera, Le Contesse villane, at the Fenice Th., Naples, with fair success. He became maestro at the Teatro Valle, Rome, in 1832; with his tenth opera, La casa disabitata o I falsi monetari, prod. at La Scala, Milan, Aug. 16, 1834, he scored his first real triumph—it made the rounds of Italy, and was given in Paris. In 1835 he went to Mexico as maestro and composer to an Italian opera-troupe, becoming its director in 1837, and going to Havana (1839) and New Orleans (1842), returning to Italy in 1844. In 1850, Director of the Milan Cons.; succeeded Mercadante as Dir. of the Naples Cons. in 1871, resigning in 1878, and retiring to Cremona in 1882. He prod. 29 operas, I falsi monetari and La Contessa di Mons (Turin, 1874) being the most successful. Other works: The oratorio Saul (1833); elegies on Bellini and Mercadante; masses, cantatas, choruses to Plautus' Captivi, 6 fugues f. string-orch., 8 vocalizzi and 12 exercises f. soprano; songs; and a Guida ad un corso di armonia pratica orale for Milan Cons.

Rossi'ni, Gioachino (Antonio), a classic representative of Italian opera; called the 'Swan of Pesaro,' because born at Pesaro, Feb. 29, 1792; died at Ruelle, near Paris, Nov. 13, 1868. From the age of 4, he was left at Bologna by his parents, who were obliged to travel to earn a subsistence; the father as horn-player in the opera-troupes in which the mother sang as prima donna buffa. Instructed from 1799, with meagre results, by a pedantic piano-teacher named Prinetti, in 1802 he was turned over to Angelo Tesei, under whom he made rapid progress; he sang in church, and afterwards followed his parents as a singer and accompanist in the theatre. In 1807 he entered the Conservatory (Liceo) at Bologna, studying composition under Padre Mattei, and the 'cello under Cavedagni. In a year he brought out a cantata, Il Pianto d'Armonia per la morte d'Orfeo, which won a prize; he soon broke off the study of counterpoint, being told by Mattei that he knew enough to write operas—the goal of his ambition. His first was a one-act opera buffa, La cambiale di matrimonio, well received at the San Mosé Th., Venice, in 1810; returning to Bologna, he produced next year a two-act opera buffa, L'equivoco stravagante, with applause. Fortunate from the outset, he received various commissions to furnish light operas, writing 5 during 1812. In 1813 he scored his first grand success with Tancredi at the Fenice Th., Venice, followed up by L'Italiana in Algeri, an opera buffa perf. at the San Benedetto Th. Encouraged by repeated successes, R. ventured to set the text of one of Paisiello's operas, Almaviva, ossia l'inutile precauzione, and to bring it out at the Argentina Th., Rome, in 1816. This opera, later so celebrated under the title of Il Barbiere di Siviglia, and certainly one of the finest specimens of Italian opera buffa, was hissed, on its first production, by the old frequenters of the theatre, indignant at the young master's 'presumption'; but the second night was a veritable triumph for R.'s genius, and the opera speedily made the round of European stages. In Elisabetta, given at Naples in 1815, R. dispensed with secco recitative—a great innovation. From 1815–23 R. was under contract to write two operas yearly for Barbaja, manager of the Neapolitan theatres, La Scala at Milan, and the Italian opera at Vienna, receiving a remuneration of 12,000 lire (francs) per annum. During these 8 years he composed no less than 20 operas. In the spring of 1822 he spent a most successful season, musically and socially, in Vienna; but he was generally engaged in travelling from town to town in Italy for the purpose of bringing out his increasingly popular dramatic works. In 1823, disappointment at the cool reception of his carefully written Semiramide by the Venetians, and a favorable offer from Benelli, the manager of the King's Th., induced him to go to London. Although Benelli did not fulfil his promises, R. met with flattering attentions from the court, and by means of grand concerts, etc., found himself in possession of £7,000 when he left England 5 months later. Now, for 18 months, he undertook the management of the Théâtre Italien at Paris, and produced several operas with much artistic success; but his managerial career was not so fortunate financially. Thereafter he was appointed 'Premier compositeur du roi' and 'Inspecteur-général du chant en France,' two sinecures to which a salary of 20,000 francs was attached; the Revolution of 1830 cost him these positions, but he afterwards received a pension of 6,000 francs. At the Opéra he presented some highly successful revisions, in French versions, of earlier Italian operas; these may be regarded as preliminary studies to his masterpiece, Guillaume Tell, first given at the Opéra on Aug. 3, 1829, with a magnificent cast, and winning immense applause. With this grand work Rossini abruptly closed his dramatic career at the age of 37. He made a flying visit to his father in Bologna, and shortly after the July Revolution returned to Paris, where, under the new régime, he had no inducement to continue opera writing. In 1832 the first six numbers of his famous Stabat Mater were written, the remaining four in 1841, and the first performance of the entire work took place on Jan. 7, 1842. Meantime Meyerbeer entered upon the scene with Les Huguenots (1836), in order to hear which R. long delayed his intended return to Bologna; after the performance he resolved to write no more operas, and this resolution was not shaken even by the sensational revival of Tell in 1837, with Duprez in the title-rôle. He lived in retirement at Bologna and Florence until 1855, thenceforward making Paris his home, but writing little new music (the Petite messe solennelle, f. soli, ch. and orch.; a cantata for the Exposition of 1867; and a number of piano-pieces). In the afterglow of his prestige as an opera-composer, amid a circle of devoted admirers and friends, his last years passed happily.

Rousseau [roo-soh'], Jean-Jacques, b. Geneva, June 28, 1712; d. Ermenonville, n. Paris, July 3, 1778. Without other musical training than desultory self-instruction, this great philosopher and author made his début in Paris at the age of 29, as a reformer of mus. notation, reading a paper before the Académie in 1742, which was revised and publ. as a Dissertation sur la musique moderne (1743). His opera, Les Muses galantes, had only one private representation, at the house of La Poupelinière in 1745; his revision of the intermezzo La Reine de Navarre (by Voltaire and Rameau) was a flat failure in Paris; but his opera Le Devin du village (Grand Opéra, 1752) was very successful, and was on the repertory for some 60 years. In the meantime his hastily written musical articles for the 'Encyclopédie' had evoked scathing criticisms from Rameau and others; improved by revision and augmentation, they were republ. as his Dictionnaire de musique (1768). In 1752 commenced the hot dispute, known as the 'guerre des Bouffons,' between the partisans of French and Italian opera; R. sided with the latter, publishing a Lettre à M. Grimm au sujet des remarques ajoutées à sa lettre sur Omphale (1752), followed by the caustic Lettre sur la musique française (1753, to which the members of the Opéra responded by burning him in effigy and excluding him from the theatre), and Lettre d'un symphoniste de l'académie royale de musique à ses camarades de l'orchestre (1753). In Pygmalion (1773) he created the melodrama; the work met with great success. Six new arias for Le Devin du village, and a collection of about 100 romances and duets, Les consolations des misères de ma vie (1781), and fragments of an opera, Daphnis et Chloé, were publ. posthumously (1780). All his writings on music have been often republ. in editions of his 'Collected Works' (1782; many eds. since). Despite his deficiencies as a musician, he exercised great influence on contemporary French art. —BIBLIOGRAPHY: A. Jansen, *J.-J. R. From 1892, 1st chef d'orch. at the Th.-Lyrique; also m. de chap. at Ste.-Clotilde, and for 10 years chorusmaster of the Concerts du Cons.; prof. of harm. at the Cons. On June 8, 1898, his 3-act lyric drama La Cloche du Rhin had a succès d'estime at the Opéra (said to be an unsatisfactory attempt to imitate Wagner's dramatic procedures), followed by the music-dramas Milia (Op.-Com., 1904) and Leone (ib., 1910; posth.). Also wrote a solemn mass, many songs, etc.

Ru'binstein [roo'bĭn-stīn], Anton Gregorovitch, b. Vichvatinets, Bessarabia, Nov. 28, 1829; d. Peterhof, n. Petrograd. Nov. 20, 1894. Soon after his birth, the family went to Moscow, where his father established a pencil-factory. His first teacher was his mother; at 7 he began the study of the piano under Alexander Villoing, who was thereafter his sole instructor on that instr. Villoing took him to Paris toward the end of 1839, and in 1840 R. played before Chopin, Liszt, and others. Liszt, fully recognizing his wonderful talent, advised him to complete his studies in Germany. From Paris master and pupil proceeded to Holland, England, Scandinavia, and Germany, giving concerts by the way; and arrived at Moscow in 1843. As Anton's brother, Nikolai [Nicholas], evinced talent for composition, both boys were taken to Berlin in 1844, where, on Meyerbeer's recommendation, Anton studied under Dehn. The father's illness (1846) caused the mother to return to Moscow with her younger son; Anton remained in Berlin, whence he visited Vienna, and made a tour through Hungary with the flutist Heindl. Returning to Russia on the outbreak of the revolution of 1848, he settled in Petrograd. Here he enjoyed the liberal patronage of the Grand Duchess Helen, and produced 3 Russian operas, Dmitri Donskoi (1852), Sibirskie Ochotniki [The Siberian Hunters] (1853; 1 act) and Fomka Duratchek [Thomas, the Fool] (1853). In 1854, on the advice and with the assistance of Count Wielhorski and the Grand Duchess, R. undertook a journey for the purpose of making himself and his works better known. He found publishers in Berlin, and gave concerts of his own works at London and Paris, exciting admiration as a composer and pianist; on his return in 1858, he was appointed court pianist, and conductor of the court concerts. He assumed the direction of the Russian Musical Society in 1859; in 1862 he founded the Imp. Cons. at Petrograd, remaining its director until 1867. In 1865 he married Vera Tchekuanov. For 20 years he held no official position; from 1867–70 he toured Europe, winning fame as a pianist hardly second to that of Liszt; 1872–3 he extended his triumphs over the American continent, playing in 215 concerts, for which he was paid $40,000; but the artistic wretchedness then endured was such that he could never again be persuaded to cross the ocean, refusing even an offer of $125,000 for fifty concerts. Otherwise his time was chiefly devoted to composing, and to bringing out his works for the stage. On Davidov's resignation in 1887, R. resumed the directorship of the Petrograd Cons. for 3 years; after which he lived principally in Berlin and (from 1892) in Dresden.—From the Czar Rubinstein received the Order of Vladimir, carrying with it nobility, and the title of Imp. Russian State Councillor; he was an Officer of the Legion of Honor, a Knight of the Prussian Ordre pour le mérite, etc., etc.

It was R.'s most cherished desire to be recognized as a great dramatic composer; but, although several of his 13 best-known operas (especially Nero, The Maccabees, The Demon) have many admirers,—though his chief bid for immortality, the new form of the so-called Sacred Opera, (The Tower of Babel, Paradise Lost, Moses, Christus,) has features of marked originality and powerful ideality,—though his Ocean symphony, his piano-concertos in D minor and G, and many beautiful piano-compositions in the most diverse styles, have been received with the warmest enthusiasm,—and though he was fêted and adored as few musicians have been,—nevertheless he died disappointed, and unhopeful for the future of musical composition. Wagner, his successful rival in dramatic composition, he never appreciated. For R., musical creation died with Chopin; and he thought the outlook but gloomy for its resurrection. With surprising rapidity his compositions have one after another disappeared from the concert-répertoire. Of his dramatic works none had ever gained a real foothold anywhere; his orchestral works went next, then his chamber-music. Some of his songs and brilliant pf.-pieces maintained themselves longest, but for some years past even these have been found but infrequently on recital-programs. R.'s music is somewhat akin to Mendelssohn's in its mellifluous sweetness and facile melodiousness, but far inferior in formal finish and technical skill. Perhaps the chief causes of R.'s comparative failure as a composer are an almost complete lack of the faculty of self-criticism (he invariably regarded his latest work as his best), inability to depict the stronger passions, and a too facile invention, combined with careless workmanship.

Saint-Huberty [săn-tü-bĕhr-tē'], (Antoinette-Cécile Clavel, called St.-Huberty,) born Toul, about 1756. Celebrated soprano singer at the Grand Opéra, Paris, 1777–89. In 1790 she married the Count d'Entraigues; they were assassinated at their country-seat, near London, July 22, 1812, probably from political motives.

Saint-Lubin [săn-lü-băn'], Léon de, b. Turin, July 5, 1805; d. Berlin, Feb. 13, 1850. Violinist, playing at Berlin and Dresden in 1817; then studied with Polledro (Dresden) and Spohr; in 1827, leader at the Josephstädter Th., Vienna. From 1830–47, leader at the Königstädter Th., Berlin.—Works: 2 operas, König Branors Schwert (Berlin, 1830), and Der Vetter des Doctor Faust; a melodrama, ballets, and pantomimes; 5 violin-concertos, 19 string-quartets, an octet, etc.

Saint-Saëns [săn-sähns'], (Charles-) Camille, born Paris, Oct. 9, 1835. At the age of 2½ years he began the study of the piano with his great-aunt, Charlotte Masson; at 5 he could easily play a Grétry opera from the score; at 7 he became a private pupil of C. Stamaty, under whom his progress was so rapid that he made his pianistic début at the Salle Pleyel on May 6, 1846; at the same time he st. harm. with Maleden. In 1848 he ent.

the Cons., where his teachers were Benoist (org.) and Halvéy (comp.); won the 2d prize for org. in 1849, and the 1st prize in 1851; in 1852 he competed unsuccessfully for the Grand Prix de Rome, failing also in a second attempt in 1864. From 1853–8 he was org. at St.-Merry, where his playing and remarkable improvisations attracted the attention of abbé Gaspard Deguerry, the rector of la Madeleine, who once said to him: "When my organist leaves me, I shall take you." In 1858 Lefébure-Wély resigned, and S.-S. succeeded to the post, which at that time was regarded as the highest position a Paris organist could attain, for la Madeleine was the most fashionable parish, and the salary (3,000 francs) the highest paid by any church. This position he filled with distinction until 1877, establishing a world-wide reputation as one of the greatest of organ-virtuosi and masters of improvisation. Since his resignation he has never held any official position, but devoted himself to composition and concertizing (as pianist, organist and cond. of his own works). From 1861–4 he taught pf. at the École Niedermeyer, where he had among his pupils A. Messager, E. Gigout and G. Fauré. He was one of the founders, in 1871, of the 'Société Nationale de Musique' (for the encouragement of French composers) and a most active and influential member until 1886, when there was a division over d'Indy's proposition to include works by foreign composers. After his mother's death in 1888 (S.-S. never married) he gave up his apartment in Paris, and deeded her rare furniture, paintings, art-treasures, etc., as well as his own MSS., to the Museum in Dieppe (his father's birthplace), thus establishing the 'S.-S. Museum' (formally opened on July 18, 1891); he has continually added to the collections. In 1868 he was made Knight of the Legion of Honor, in 1884 Officer, in 1900 Grand-Officer, and in 1913 'Grand-Croix' (the highest honor); in 1881 he was elected member of the Acad., succeeding Reber; is also a member of the Academies of Belgium, Prussia, Sweden and Spain (Ateneo); made Mus. Doc., Cantab. (hon. c.) in 1892; has been honored with innumerable orders and decorations. On Oct. 27, 1907, he witnessed the unveiling of his own statue (by Marqueste) in the foyer of the opera house in Dieppe.—All his life S.-S. has travelled extensively, visiting almost every country in the world, either for pleasure or on concert-tours. He visited the U. S. for the first time in the fall of 1906; his second visit, in 1915, was made as representative of the French government at the Panama Expos. For this occasion he had written a new orchl. work, Hail, California, the first perf. of which he cond. personally in San Francisco on June 19; he also delivered a lecture on L'exécution de la musique, et principalement de la musique ancienne. In 1916 (at the age of 81!) he made his first tour of South America, and after his return to France concertized for the benefit of various war-funds; in May, 1917, he cond. a perf. of his Samson et Dalila at the Costanzi Theatre in Rome.

From the very beginning of his career, S.-S.'s preëminence as an executant was acknowledged. His phenomenal ability to reproduce at sight orchl. scores on the pf. called forth the admiration of Wagner, for whom (during W.'s stay in Paris in 1860–1) he played the entire scores of Tannhäuser, Lohengrin and Tristan. But his compositions, until about 1880, encountered considerable opposition in France, whereas Germany, almost immediately, recognized S.-S. as among—if not really—the most important of living French composers. The very qualities that proved an obstacle to the French public appealed to the German: decided preference for instrumental forms (both classical and modern), brilliant orchestration, masterly workmanship, solid contrapuntal learning. Besides, a certain grace and lightness of touch—the Germans use the French word 'esprit'—made a strong appeal to the Germans, perhaps because it is seldom found in German composers. The earlier French critics characterized S.-S. as 'learned and dangerous'; learned, because his music rests on the solid foundations of Bach and Beethoven, dangerous, because of his (then) well-known sympathy for the new school of Wagner and Liszt. Only gradually did he overcome this prejudice, and—strangely enough—chiefly through his Symphonic Poems. Had his operas, like those of Massenet, appealed to the French taste, success would have been instantaneous. But as a matter of fact, S.-S.'s operas, excepting Samson et Dalila and Henry VIII, are not among his best works; and, absurd as it seems to-day, until the end of the last century the almost unanimous verdict of French critics condemned every opera of S.-S. as 'Wagnerian.' Not until the French public had become educated to the appreciation of instrumental music—largely through the efforts of the Soc. Nat. de Musique, Pasdeloup, Colonne and Lamoureux—did S.-S. win due recognition in his native land. The French then made amends for their earlier indifference by proclaiming him, even while alive, one of their 'classic masters.'—Perhaps the most striking characteristic of S.-S. is his universality. Not only has he cultivated all forms of music, but he has successfully imitated almost all styles from the 16th century on, excepting impressionism, for which he has no sympathy. This Protean facility of assimilation has unfortunately made him an eclectic, and prevented the development of an individual style. Perhaps the strongest influence has been that of Liszt, of whom the French master has always been an enthusiastic admirer and zealous advocate. Certain it is that of all S.-S.'s works the Symphonic Poems rank highest as regards compelling utterance and sustained power. In fact, he is at his best in 'program music,' which appeals to his sense of the picturesque, and offers him full opportunity for the display of his talent for characterization and his mastery of orchestration. In the works on strictly classical lines (excepting the 3rd Symphony) his inspiration is seldom sustained, and his thematic material sometimes lacks distinction.

Besides his fame as a virtuoso and composer S.-S. has achieved distinction as a writer, not only on musical, but also on scientific subjects. The serious study of astronomy has been his hobby through life. His critical and historical writings on music exhibit an encyclopædic knowledge of the whole field, keen analysis and, generally, excellent judgment. His inconsistency in his attitude toward Wagner, changing more than once, is to be regretted (cf., e. g., his letters on the Bayreuth Fest. to 'l'Estafette' [Aug. 19–25, 1876] and his last book, Germanophilie [1916]).

During Gassmann's absence in Rome, 1770, S. took his place as conductor, and produced his first opera, Le Donne letterate, at the Burg Th., with marked success. S. then returned to Vienna, brought out five operas within a year, and in 1786 made a second venture in Paris with Les Horaces, which failed; Tarare, however, made a sensation in 1787 (it was given at Vienna in a revised version as Axur, re d'Ormus). 1771 by Gassmann) until 1818. He was an excellent teacher; among his pupils were Beethoven and Schubert. Sanderson, Lillian, concert mezzo-soprano; born Sheboygan, Wis., Oct. 13, 1867. At 14 her singing in church attracted attention; she studied with Stockhausen in Frankfort-on-Main; début as concert-singer at Berlin, 1890; since then, successful tours to the chief cities of Europe; an enthusiastic admirer of Bungert, she has made numerous attempts to popularize his songs. In 1899 she married the painter and etcher, Richard Müller, prof. at the Kgl. Kunstakademie in Dresden; living in Loschwitz, n. Dresden.

Sanderson, Sibyl, dramatic soprano; born Sacramento, Cal., Dec. 7, 1865; died Paris, May 16, 1903. She was educated in San Francisco, where her musical talent attracted attention; taken to Paris by her mother, she studied at the Conservatoire with Massenet, also with Sbriglia and Mme. Marchesi. Her operatic début was as Manon in Massenet's opera at the Hague (1888); her first appearance in Paris at the Opéra-Comique in Esclarmonde (1889), which Massenet wrote for her, like Thaïs (Grand Opéra, 1894); Saint-Saëns wrote Phryné (1893) for her. In 1895, and again in 1898, she sang at the M. O. H. in New York. In 1897 she married a wealthy Chilean, Antonio Terry, who died in 1900. In Paris she was principally identified with the operas of Massenet, who regarded her as his greatest interpreter, while the public adored her. In New York she made no impression. Her voice was pure and sweet, but small and cold; as an actress she was completely lacking in emotional warmth; but her personal beauty and charm of manner were extraordinary.—Cf. J. Massenet, Mes Souvenirs (Paris, 1912).

Sanford, Samuel Simons, b. Bridgeport, Conn., 1849; d. New York, June 6, 1910. St. pf. for several years with Karl Klingman and William Mason, and for 2 years with S. B. Mills; went to Europe in 1868, studying with Rubinstein, and in Paris with É. Battiste and Th. Ritter. Nervousness and a certain natural diffidence (possibly also the possession of a large fortune) stood in the way of his becoming (as Rubinstein put it) 'one of the greatest artists of the century.' He made few public appearances (Thomas orchl. concerts), and declined an invitation to be the soloist at one of the Worcester (Engl.) festivals. After one of his rare appearances in N. Y. the 'Evening Post' wrote: 'His individual style of play was marked by power, perfect accuracy, finished quality, high expression, exquisite feeling, and every musical trait of a great artist.' In 1894 he accepted the professorship of applied music at Yale, developing the musical dept. of the university in coöperation with H. Parker, and expanding the system of university concerts.

Guidi (org.) and Jannaconi (comp.); ordained priest in 1801. He spent his entire life hunting for works of the old masters in various Italian libraries, making full scores from the part-books. As early as 1820 he publ. a catalogue of the MS. scores then in his possession, Catalogo della musica antica, sacra e madrigalesca . . ., listing 1,000 titles by more than 700 composers. The valuable collection is now in the library of the Cath. in Münster, Westphalia. His original comps. Sant'ley, Sir Charles, baritone singer in opera and concert; b. Liverpool, Feb. 28, 1834. His stage-début was at Covent Garden, Oct. 1, 1859, as Hoël in Dinorah; he joined the Carl Rosa Company in 1875, and toured with it for several years with great success. He visited America in 1871 and 1891; Australia in 1899–90. In 1887 he was made Commander of the Order of St. Gregory; in 1907, shortly after the celebration of the 50th anniversary of his début, he was knighted. He has comp. a mass f. soli, ch. and orch.; an offertory, an Ave Maria, etc.; a Berceuse f. orch. Giovanni in Laterano, Rome. A motet a 16, for 4 choirs, received a prize from the Accad. Napoleone in 1806 because of the 'entirely new and original' combination of voices. Baini publ. an energetic protest, showing that 16-part writing for four choirs had been extensively employed by Italian composers of the 16th and 17th centuries. He also wrote masses, motets, psalms, canons up to 7 parts, symphonies, organ-sonatas, etc.; also publ. Sulla melodia, sull'armonia e sul metro (1828).—Cf. G. Rinuccini, Biografia di M. S. (Milan, 1851).—See also Q.-Lex.

At the age of ten he played before Queen Isabella, who presented him with a fine Stradivarius. After successful concerts in Spain he studied 1856–9 at the Paris Cons. under Alard, taking the 1st prize in the violin-class in 1857, and a 'premier accessit' in 1859. He soon renounced the study of composition (under Reber) for the career of a virtuoso. From the very beginning of his career he was noted for the extraordinary beauty of his tone, impeccable purity of intonation, perfection of technic and grace of manner; but his répertoire consisted almost exclusively of fantasies on operatic airs (mostly arr. by himself). About the year 1870, the time of his first Amer. tour, his taste changed, and he turned to the masterpieces of violin-literature; when he reappeared in Paris in 1872 he was hailed as a new star. From that time until his very last years his tours, extending through all Europe, North and South America, South Africa and the Orient, were an uninterrupted succession of triumphs. His annual visit to his native city came to be celebrated as a public festival. He bequeathed to the city the gifts which had been showered upon him by admirers throughout the world; the collection, valued at more than 100,000 francs, was placed in a special museum. For him Lalo wrote his first violin-concerto and the Symphonie espagnole; Bruch, the second concerto and the Schottische Fantasie; Mackenzie, the Pibroch suite. S.'s comps., exclusively for violin, owed their popularity to his own fascinating performance rather than to intrinsic musical merit.—Works: For vl. and orch.: Op. 20, Zigeunerweisen (his best and most popular work); op. 33, Navarra (for 2 vls.); op. 34, Airs écossais; op. 35, Peteneras, caprice; op. 36, Jota de San Fermin; op. 44, La Chasse; op. 45, Nocturne-Sérénade; op. 49, Chansons russes; op. 53, Rêve; Spanish dances (op. 32, 37, 38, 41, 42, 43); fantasies on Carmen and Faust. For vl. and pf.: Spanish dances (op. 21, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 39) and numerous fantasies on operas of Mozart, Weber, Verdi, Gounod, Hérold and Flotow.—Cf. Sarrette [săhr-rĕht'], Bernard, founder of the Paris Conservatoire; b. Bordeaux, Nov. 27, 1765; d. Paris, April 13, 1858. A captain in the national guard at Paris, he brought together, after the 14th of July, 1789, 45 musicians to form the nucleus of the Parisian band of the national guard. In 1790 the City of Paris assumed the expenses of this band, which was increased to 70 members, among them artists of distinction. In 1792 the financial embarrassments of the commune led to a suspension of payment; but S. held the band together, and, with the aid of the municipality, established a free school of music employing all the members as teachers. From this school came the musicians employed in the fourteen armies of the Republic. Its energetic principal soon had it converted into a national Institute of Music; and in Sept., 1795, it was definitively organized as a Conservatory. Sarrette, having gained his end, assumed the captaincy of the 103rd Regiment; but the board of directors (5 Inspectors and 4 professors) proved so incompetent, that he was recalled to the Directorship of the Conservatoire in 1796. By introducing advanced methods of instruction, establishing the school of declamation, the concert-hall, the grand library, etc., he raised the Cons. to an institution of the first rank. At the Restoration in 1814 he was deprived of his position; nor would he accept it after the revolution of 1830, not wishing to oust his friend Cherubini.—Pierre Constant wrote B. Sarrette et les origines du Conservatoire national de musique et de déclamation (Paris, 1895).

Sar'ri, Domenico, b. Trani, Naples, 1678; d. after 1741. Pupil (1688–97) of Salvatori and Provenzale in the Cons. della Pietà; in 1712, 2d, later 1st maestro at the Naples court. He prod. a score of operas; several oratorios; a cantata; 3 serenades; a concerto f. 2 violins, fl., vla., vcl. and d.-bass; etc.—See Q.-Lex.

Sar'ti, Giuseppe, called il Domenichi'no, b. Faenza, Dec. 1, 1729; d. Berlin, July 28, 1802. A pupil of Padre Martini at Bologna, he was organist at Faenza Cath. 1748–50; in this town his first opera, Pompeo in Armenia, was successfully produced (1752). Il Re pastore (Venice, 1753), and others, made him so famous, that in 1753 he was called to Copenhagen as director of the Italian opera and conductor to the Crown Prince. On the closing of the opera 2 years later, S. was made court cond.; in 1765 he was commissioned to engage singers in Italy for a new company, but the king's death, and other matters, kept him there for three years; he returned to Copenhagen in 1768, conducted the court opera 1770–5, and was then dismissed for political reasons. For 4 years he was director of the Cons. dell' Ospedaletto at Venice. In a competition with the leading musicians of Italy, held at the Naples Cons. in 1779, he obtained the position of maestro di cappella at Milan Cathedral, vacated by Fioroni's decease. This victory so increased his reputation, that many students of distinction sought his instruction, among them Cherubini. This was also the period of his greatest dramatic success; of some 15 operas prod. from 1776–84, the finest were Le gelosie villane and Farnace (Venice, 1776), Achille in Sciro (Florence, 1779), Giulio Sabino (Venice, 1871), and Fra i due litiganti il terzo gode [Le nozze di Dorina] (Venice, 1782). In Milan he also wrote several grand cantatas, and, for the cathedral, several masses, a Miserere a 4, and some important motets (most are in MS. at the cathedral). Invited to Petrograd by Catherine II, he passed through Vienna, where he was royally received by the Emperor, and met Mozart; his pedantic strictures on the latter's music (quartets) go far to explain the comparatively short life of most of his own works. In Petrograd he lived from 1784–1801, excepting a brief period of disgrace (1787–91) owing to the machinations of the Todi, then a prime favorite with the Empress. He raised the Italian opera to an unexampled state of efficiency, and composed valuable works for the court choir, among them a Te Deum (on the taking of Otchakov by Potemkin) in which the martial effect of the music was reinforced by cannon-shots. His opera Armida (1786) obtained sweeping success. In 1793 he was app. director of the Cons. at Yekaterinoslav, organized on the Italian plan. He was ennobled in 1795. He died on the homeward journey, undertaken because of failing health. —Of his 54 operas, not one is now played; some of his masses are still performed, but all the rest of his music is practically forgotten, and very little was ever printed.—Cf. P. Scudo, Le Chevalier S. (Paris, 1857; Ger. tr. by O. Kade, 1858); G. Pasolini-Zanelli, G. S. (Faenza, 1883).—See Q.-Lex.

Sarto'rio, Antonio, b. Venice, c. 1620; d. there c. 1681. Dram. comp.; from 1676 asst. m. di capp. at San Marco. From 1652–81 he prod. 14 operas in Venice; also publ. Psalms a 8 (1680).—See Q.-Lex.

Saslav'sky, Alexander, b. Charkov, Russia, Feb. 8, 1876. Violinist, beginning study under private teachers at nine, and at eleven continuing in the Imp. Sch. of music under Pestel (a pupil of Ferd. David) and later under Gorsky; finishing under Jakob Gruen in Vienna (1893). Concert-tour in 1893 through Canada and British Columbia; then joined the N. Y. Symph. Orch. (W. Damrosch) as one of the 1st violins; since 1903 he has been concertmaster, soloist, and asst.-cond. of that organization. Active in organizing the Russian Symph. Orch. in 1904; concertmaster and soloist with it for four years. He has introduced several new violin compositions (in 1910 he played the newly-discovered Haydn concerto; in 1911 the Poème by Chausson). Has toured the U. S. from coast to coast, appearing in practically every town of importance. In 1907 he organized his own str.-quartet (S., N. Finkelstein, H. Weismann, J. Renard), which enjoys an excellent reputation. In the summer of 1915 he gave in Denver, Col., a series of chamber-music recitals with such success that he has repeated them every summer; the quartet being then assisted by Alfred de Voto (pianist).

Sass [Sax], Marie-Constance, French operatic soprano; b. Ghent, Jan. 26, 1838; d. Auteuil, n. Paris, Nov. 8, 1907 (in the poorhouse). 'Discovered,' while a chansonette-singer in a Paris café, by Mme. She resides in Bologna. Has made transcriptions of pf.-comps. for harp.

Satie [săh-tē'], Erik (-Alfred-Leslie), b. Honfleur, Eure, May 17, 1866. At the age of 8 he received his first musical instruction from a local organist, Vinot (pupil of Niedermeyer); studied a short time with Guilmant (1878), and in 1879 ent. the Paris Cons., where his lack of application caused him to be regarded as absolutely untalented. After leaving the Cons. he played in various cabarets in Montmartre until about 1890, when he met Josephin Péladan, a writer and leader of a mystic cult, the 'Salon de la Rose-Croix,' which he joined in 1892. For the next 2 years he wrote incidental music to mystic plays by Péladan and other members of the salon. Feeling the inadequacy of his technical equipment, he then ent. the Schola Cantorum for serious study, and nothing was heard of him until 1911, when Ravel played some of his pieces for pf.; since then he has been living in Arcueil, n. Paris, devoting himself to composition. His first works for pf., Ogives (1886), 3 Sarabandes (1887), 3 Gymnopédies (1888) and 3 Gnossiennes (1889), are remarkable as exhibiting the fully developed impressionistic style of Debussy at a time when the latter was just beginning to 'find himself.' Shortly after D.'s return from Rome (1889) the two men met, and became fast friends. S. has also written a ballet, Uspud (1892); incid. music to Péladan's Le Fils des Étoiles (1891; prelude orch. by Ravel) and Le Prince de Byzance (1891), to H. Mazel's Le Nazaréen (1892), to J. Bois's La Porte héroïque au Ciel (1893), to M. de Feraudy's Pousse l'Amour (1905); numerous pf.-pcs., notable chiefly for their extravagant titles (Morceaux en forme de poire, Pièces froides, Aperçus désagréables, etc.).—Cf. G. Jean-Aubry, La Musique française d'aujourd'hui (Paris, 1916); C. van Vechten, E. S., in Interpreters and Interpretations (N. Y., 1917; with full list of works).

Organizing a small company of competent singers and a fine chorus, he began his career as impresario with a season of grand opera in English at moderate prices. The 'Castle Square Opera Co.' flourished, more ambitious works were presented, and tours of other cities were undertaken. In 1900 he formed the 'English Grand Opera Co.', including, besides his own artists, stars from the Carl Rosa company of London; in Oct.–Dec., 1900, he gave a series of performances at the M. O. H. In 1904–5 he organized a special company, producing Parsifal in English with immense success in the principal cities of the East and Middle West; in 1906–7 the same company made a tour with Puccini's Madama Butterfly (Amer. première, Garden Th., N. Sax, (Antoine-Joseph-) Adolphe, famous instrument-maker, son of Charles-

Joseph S.; b. Dinant, Nov. 6, 1814; d. Paris, Feb. 9, 1894. At the Brussels Cons. he studied the flute and clarinet; Bender called him his best pupil. A skilful workman from early youth, he made improvements in the clarinet 1835–40, and in 1842 went to Paris with a new instr. invented by himself, the 'Saxophone' (a metal wind-instr. with single-reed mouthpiece and conical bore). Berlioz and other prominent musicians speedily recognized the importance of S.'s invention, and warmly advocated its adoption. S., aided by his father, continued his experiments, and evolved two other groups of wind-instrs., the saxhorns (improved from the bugle-horn and ophicleide by replacing the keys by a valve-mechanism), and the saxotromba, midway in tone between the bugle and the horn. His instrs. were gradually adopted by French military bands; the saxophone is sometimes employed in orchestral and chamber-music. S. was app. teacher of the saxophone at the Paris Cons. in 1857; he publ. a method for that instr. Wieprecht, Červeny, and others, have disputed the originality of his inventions; but legal decisions have been uniformly in his favor.—Cf. O. Comettant, Histoire d'un inventeur du XIX^me^ siècle (Paris, 1860); Th. Lajarte, Instruments Sax et fanfares civiles (ib., 1876).

He joined his son Adolphe in Paris, 1853.

Sbri'glia [sbrēl'yăh], Giovanni, was born in Naples in 1840. At 18 he became a pupil of de Roxas in the Naples Cons., and made his début at 21 as leading tenor in Ricci's Il Birrajo di Preston, at the San Carlo Th., then singing in all Italy the entire Italian repertory of the day. Engaged by M. Maretzek, he sang in New York at the Acad. of Music with Patti in La Sonnambula, etc.; in Havana he successfully deployed his repertory of over 30 rôles, and then made a grand tournée of the United States with Parodi and Adelaide Phillipps. After seasons in Mexico and Havana, he again toured the States as far as San Francisco, and returned to Europe, settling in Paris about 1875. His success in training the tenor Nouvelli now led S. to devote himself to teaching; at this time Jean de Reszké was singing baritone rôles in the Théâtre de la Salle Ventadour, but under S.'s training he re-formed his voice, and came out in the tenor rôle of Robert (Robert le Diable) in Madrid (1879). Joséphine and Édouard de Reszké also profited by S.'s instructions, the former changing her voice from a light to a dramatic soprano within six months, singing the rôle of Selika in l'Africaine so finely that Massenet wrote for her the leading rôle in Le Roi de Lahore. Other celebrated pupils are Pol Plançon, Nordica, Sibyl Sanderson, etc. He was an officer of the Académie, and member of the R. Acad. at Florence from 1890.

Scal'chi [skăhl'kē], Sofia, dram. mezzo-soprano; b. Turin, Nov. 29, 1850. Pupil of Boccabadati; début Mantua, 1866, as Ulrica in Verdi's Ballo in Maschera; then sang in Verona, Bologna, Nice, etc. In London her concert-début (Sept. 16, 1868) was a great success, her operatic début (Cov. Garden, Nov. 5, 1868) as Azucena an extraordinary success; from then until 1890 she sang there every season, her popularity becoming so great as to arouse the jealousy of Patti. She visited the U. S. for the first time in 1882 in Col. Mapleson's company; sang under Abbey in the first season given at the M. O. H. (1883–4); the next two seasons again with Mapleson; sang at the M. O. H. under Grau's management from 1891–6. She has also sung in Petrograd, Moscow, Warsaw, Vienna, Madrid and Rio de Janeiro. In 1896 she retired to her castle, Villa Sofia, in Turin. In 1875 she married Count Luigi Lolli. Her voice had a range of 2½ octaves, from *f–b♭*²; in her prime it was very sympathetic, powerful and perfectly even throughout. Her rôles included Pierotto (Linda di Chamounix), Leonora (Favorita), Meala (Paul et Virginie), Fides (Prophète), Page (Huguenots), Arsace (Semiramide), Amneris, Siebel, Ortrud, etc.

Sca'ria, Emil, highly gifted dramatic bass; b. Graz, Sept. 18, 1838; d. Blasewitz, n. Dresden, July 22, 1886. Pupil of Netzer at Graz, and of Gentiluomo and Lewy at Vienna. His début in 1860, at Pest, as Saint-Bris in Les Huguenots was a complete fiasco. After some months' study with Garcia in London (1862) he appeared again in Dessau, scoring a brilliant success; was then eng. at Leipzig (1863), Dresden (1864), and lastly at the Court Opera, Vienna, from 1872. He excelled in Wagner rôles (created Gurnemanz [Parsifal] in 1882).—Cf. A. Neumann, Erinnerungen an R. Wagner (Leipzig, 1907; Engl. tr. by E. Livermore, N. Y., 1908).

Scarlat'ti, Alessandro, founder of the 'Neapolitan School' of music; b. Trapani, Sicily, 1659; d. Naples, Oct. 24, 1725. There is no authentic record of his early life and training; in 1680 he conducted his first known opera, L'Onestà nell' amore, at the palace of Queen Christina of Sweden in Rome; on the score of another, Pompeo, performed there in 1684, he is styled maestro di cappella to the Queen. In 1694 he was maestro to the Viceroy at Naples. In 1703 he became asst.-maestro to Foggia at S. Maria Maggiore, Rome, and succeeded him as chief maestro 1707, resigning in 1709 and returning to Naples, where he subsequently became maestro of the royal chapel. He also taught successively at the Conservatories of San Onofrio, de' Poveri di Gesù Cristo, and the Loreto; among his distinguished pupils were Durante, Leo, Feo, Logroscino, Hasse and Porpora. S. produced no less than 115 operas (41 still extant); La Rosaura (Rome, about 1690), edited by Eitner, was printed by the 'Gesellschaft für Musikforschung,' Vol. xiv; in Teodora (Rome, 1693) occurs the first orchl. ritornello, and an incipient recitativo obbligato accompanied by the entire orchestra; also several arias with the first part sung da capo, a style which was later generally adopted by opera-composers;—an aria and a duet from Laodicea e Berenice (Naples, 1701) have been publ. by J. J. C. Maier, also a terzet and quartet from Griselda (Rome, 1721), with German transl. by v. Wolzogen; in Tigrane (Venice, 1715; marked by S. himself as his 115th opera) the orch. comprises violins, violas, 'celli, double-basses, 2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, and 2 horns. 14 oratorios are also known; he is said to have written over 200 masses (up to ten parts), besides much other sacred music (Concerti sacri, motets a 1–4, w. 2 violins, viola and organ, were publ. at Amsterdam as op. 1 and 2; a few separate numbers are in the colls. of Choron, the Prince of Moszkva, Commer [a Tu es Petrus], Dehn, Proske, and Rochlitz; Choron also publ. a Requiem, and Proske a mass); his secular vocal music includes madrigals (one a 4, f. SS.AA., is in Padre Martini's 'Esempl. di contrapp. fugato'), serenatas, duets, and a vast number of cantatas (Dent gives a list of 600 with basso cont. and 61 with instrs.). The Cons. Library at Paris has 8 vols. of these in MS. —Cf. E. J. Dent, The Operas of A. S., in 'Sbd. I. M.-G.' (iv, 1); id., A. S. His Life and Works (London, 1905).—See also Q.-Lex.

Scarlat'ti, Domenico, son of preceding; celebrated composer for and player on the harpsichord; b. Naples, Oct. 26, 1685; d. there 1757. He first attracted attention as an arranger (1704) and composer of operas (he was taught by his father and Gasparini); he also early made a reputation as a harpsichord-player, for when Handel visited Rome in 1709, Cardinal Ottoboni chose S., as the foremost Italian harpsichordist and organist, to compete with the great German, who proved his equal on the harpsichord, and his superior on the organ. In Jan., 1715, S. was app. Bai's successor as maestro at St. Peter's, Rome, resigning in 1719 to become maestro al cembalo at the Italian Opera, London, where his opera Narciso was prod. in 1720; in 1721 he became court cembalist at Lisbon, and music-master to the princesses; was in Naples 1725–9, in Madrid 1729–54, as music-master to the Princess of the Asturias, and then returned to Naples. Owing to his passion for gambling, he left his family in destitution, which Farinelli generously relieved.—Domenico Scarlatti's especial claim to renown rests upon his harpsichord-music; he studied the peculiarities of the instrument, and adapted his compositions to them, being the first writer in the 'free style' (the homophonic 'song-form' with graceful ornamentation, in contrast to the former—contrapuntal —vocal or organ-style). He also obtained effects by the frequent crossing of the hands; runs in thirds and sixths; leaps wider than an octave; broken chords in contrary motion; tones repeated by rapidly changing fingers; etc. He has been called the founder of modern pianoforte technique. A characteristic of S.'s pieces is their brevity. He publ. only 2 books of Pièces pour le clavecin . . . (32 numbers), and Esercizi per gravicembalo . . . Abbate Santini (q. v.) had in his library 349 comps. for harpsichord and organ by S.; K. F. Pohl had a coll. of 304 (all MS.). Modern editions include a coll., by Czerny, of 200 pieces; Breitkopf, 60; Pauer, 50 Harpsichord-lessons, also other pieces in 'Alte Meister,' 'Alte Claviermusik,' 'Old Italian Composers,' and 'Merry Musicians'; Köhler, 12 sonatas and fugues; Tausig, 3 sonatas; v. Bülow, 18 pieces in suite-form; Schletterer, 18; André, 28; Banck, 30; Farrenc, 100 (in 'Trésor des pianistes'); Peters, in 'Alte Claviermusik.' In 1906 Ricordi began the publication of S.'s complete harpsichord-works, edited by Alessandro Longo (6 vols. up to 1917).—Cf. A. Longo, *D. Schatz, Albert, b. Rostock, May [not Mar.] 19, 1839; d. there Oct. 18, 1910. After living for 7 years in San Francisco he returned in 1873 to his native city, where he took over the music-business of Ludwig Trutschel. He then conceived the plan of writing the history of opera from original sources, and began to collect the original libretti of the first performances; after almost half a century he had in his possession about 12,000; the statistical material he had entered on about 80,000 cards, each containing the title of an opera, name of comp. and librettist, city, theatre and date, not only of first perf. (world-première), but also of first perfs. in other cities. Being in feeble health, he sold his valuable coll. of libretti, the largest in the world, in 1908 to the Library of Congress in Washington, where it has since been systematically extended.—Cf. O. G. Sonneck's Preface to Catalogue of Opera Librettos printed before 1800 (2 vols.; Washington, 1914).

Besides Die Zauberflöte he wrote the libretti of 35 'Singspiele' (full list, with names of composers, in Grove, iv., 263).—Cf. E von Komorzynski, *E. S. Schiller, Friedrich von, the great German poet; b. Marbach, Nov. 10, 1759; d. Weimar, May 9, 1805. Even in the poet's lifetime many musicians turned to his works for inspiration; up to the present day the number of compositions by composers of every nationality, in every field of music (vocal and instrl.), inspired by S.'s poetry has been steadily increasing. Nevertheless, scholars have only quite recently begun to investigate this influence of the poet upon musicians. The following meagre list of works bearing upon the subject is practically exhaustive: M. Berendt, S. bis Wagner (Berlin, 1901); J. Baltz, Beethoven und S. (Arnsberg, 1905); A. Kohut, F. S. in seinen Beziehungen zur Musik und zu Musikern (Stuttgart, 1905); V. D. Karganov, S. (Tiflis, 1905 [in Russian]; appended list of comps. very incomplete); R. Sternfeld, S. und Wagner (Berlin, 1905); H. Knudsen, S. und die Musik (Greifswald, 1908); G. Adler, S. und Schubert (Vienna, 1910). The S.-number of 'Die Musik' (vol. xv; May, 1905) contains essays by W. Golther, S. und Wagner; M. Runze, S. und die Balladenmusik; R. Hohenemser, S. als Musikästhetiker.

Isaacs [excellent pianist and teacher; 1818–1881], and for a short time of Benedict and Hallé, she really formed her own style; after a year and a quarter at Leipzig with Moscheles she made a brilliant début at the Gewandhaus, playing Mendelssohn's G-minor concerto; then made a very succ. tour of England. On her return from a successful Australian tour, she married Mr. Marcus Elmer Bennett of Boston, Mass., making that city her headquarters for several years, and winning renown in the United States by her concerts. A second tour in Australia was followed by a season of concertizing in Europe. A severe illness cut short her pianistic career about 1895; from then she lived in New York, highly esteemed as a teacher. She won general recognition by her spirited and refined interpretations of classic and modern pf.-literature.

In his dramatic works he consciously adopts Wagner's form and principles, but a strong individuality characterizes his music, which thus rises far above the level of the average imitator; nowhere are any direct reminiscences to be found. His technical mastery commands respect; unfortunately, his music is lacking in real inspiration and warmth. —Works: The music-dramas Ingwelde (op. 3; Karlsruhe, 1894), Der Pfeifertag (op. 10; Schwerin, 1899), Moloch (op. 20; Dresden, 1906), Mona Lisa (op. 31; Stuttgart, 1915); incid. music to Sophocles's Oedipus Rex (op. 11), Aeschylus's Agamemnon and Eumenides [Orestie] (op. 12), Goethe's Faust (Part I); Dem Verklärten for bar. solo, ch. and orch. (op. 21); Glockenlieder for solo voice and orch. (op. 22); Hochzeitsglocken for bar. solo, ch. and orch. A violinist, he became Kapellm. at the German Opera, Vienna. During the last 8 years of Beethoven's life, S. lived in the same house, doing everything in his power for the master. From 1831–5 he was cathedral-Kapellm. at Münster and from 1835–7 at Aix-la-Chapelle; in 1842 he returned to Münster, and later moved to Bockenheim. His intimacy with Beethoven lends peculiar value to his Biographie Ludwig van Beethovens (Münster, 1840; 2d [enlarged] ed. 1845; repr. by A. Kalischer, 1909; Engl. tr. by I. Moscheles, 1841). Schir'mer, G. (incorporated), noted music-publishing house at New York. It is an outgrowth of the business founded in 1848 by Kerksieg & Breusing, in which Gustav Schirmer (q. v.) obtained an interest in 1861 (firm-name then Beer & Schirmer), and complete control in 1866. In 1893 the business was changed to a stock-company under the management of Rudolph E. Schirmer (b. New York, July 22, 1859) and Gustav Schirmer (b. N. Y., Feb. 18, 1864; d. Boston, July 15, 1907), sons of the founder. In 1885 the latter founded 'The Boston Music Co.', to which he gave his entire attention till 1891, when he returned to New York, the Boston firm becoming a branch of the N. Y. house. The officers at present [1918] are Rudolph E. Schirmer, Pres. and Treas., and Gustav Schirmer, Jr., Sec.; the catalogue comprises over 28,000 titles. In 1894 the firm began the publication of the 'Library of Musical Classics,' which, as regards careful editing, accuracy and general typographical excellence, rivals the famous editions of some of the European houses; in the same year was also begun the 'Collection of Operas' (vocal scores with original text and Engl. translation, as well as historical and critical introductions). Under the editorship of O. G. Sonneck 'The Musical Quarterly' was established in 1914, the first number appearing in Jan., 1915; from the very beginning this publication, containing contributions from the foremost scholars of America and Europe, has occupied a place by itself among the musical periodicals of the U. S.

Schirmer, Gustav, founder of the New York music-publishing house; b. Königsee, Saxony, Sept. 19, 1829; d. Eisenach, Thuringia, Aug. 6, 1893, on a journey undertaken with the hope of restoring his health. Both his father and grandfather were piano-makers to the court of Sondershausen. He went to New York in 1837; entered the music-store of Scharfenberg & Luis, and in 1854 became the manager of Breusing's music-business. In 1861, with B. Beer, he took over this business, which was then carried on under the firm-name of 'Beer & Schirmer' until 1866, when S. obtained complete control. Since then the house has become one of the most important in the world, both for the publication of, and general trade in, music. S. was a publisher with an artistic conscience; it was his life-work to elevate the public taste, not to win mere commercial success by catering to 'popular' wants; and his influence for good is felt throughout America.

Schönberg, Arnold, b. Vienna, Sept. 13, 1874. Until his twentieth year, entirely self-taught; then studied with his brother-in-law, Alexander von Zemlinsky. Unable to gain a hearing for his works in Vienna, he went to Berlin in 1901; there he met H. von Wolzogen, F. Wedekind and O. Bierbaum, who were just launching their 'Überbrettl' (a sort of artistic cabaret), which created quite a sensation, and S. accepted the position of Kapellm.; after a little more than a year public curiosity had been satisfied, and upon R. Strauss's recommendation S. obtained a position as teacher at Stern's Cons.; but failed to attain his main object, the performance of his own works, and returned in 1903 to Vienna. There he met Gustav Mahler, who took a lively interest in the man and his works; M.'s will was law, and, consequently, singers had to sing S.'s songs (op. 1, 2, 3, 6), the Rosé-Quartet performed the sextet Verklärte Nacht (op. 4), the str.-quartet in D m. (op. 7) and the Kammersymphonie in E (op. 9), and the newly-founded 'Vereinigung schaffender Tonkünstler' was asked to produce the symph. poem Pelleas und Melisande (op. 5). Each of these works contained passages of great beauty that gave proof of real talent, and expectation ran high; S. found himself suddenly famous, and pupils began to flock to him; in 1910 he was app. teacher of comp. at the 'k. k. Akademie für Tonkunst.' The new works, however, did not fulfill expectations, and in 1911 S. again tried Berlin, settling there as private teacher; this time he was successful, soon gathering a small, but very enthusiastic circle of admirers, who began an effective propaganda. Since then he has given full rein to his originality, employing harmonies and a style of orchestration far in advance of any known system; neither does he allow the flight of his imagination to be hampered by material or mechanical considerations; e.g., his Gurrelieder is scored for 5 solo voices, a recitator, 2 choruses (of 8 and 12 parts, resp.), and 114 orchl.

parts!—Besides the works mentioned he has written songs w. orch. (op. 8); a second str.-quartet in F♯ m. (op. 10); pf.-pcs. (op. 11, 17, 19); a capp. choruses (op. 13); songs w. pf. (op. 15); 5 pcs. for orch. (op. 16); Pierrot Lunaire, melodrama for recitation (op. 21). A second Kammersymphonie remains unfinished; his latest work, Erwartung, a monodrama, is not yet publ. His Harmonielehre (1911) is a peculiar mixture of antiquated theories and ultra-modern extravagances.—Cf. A. S., a coll. of essays by 11 admirers (Munich, 1912); E. Steinhard, Die Kunst A. S.'s, in 'Neue Musikzeitung' (1912, No. 18); A. E. Hull, S. Explained, in 'Monthly Mus. Record' (Mar.–July, 1914); J. G. Huneker, S., in Ivory, Apes and Peacocks (New York, 1915); E. Wagner was influenced to a considerable extent by S.'s philosophical system.—Cf. K. Fuchs, Präliminarien zu einer Kritik der Tonkunst (Greifswald, 1870); F. von Hausegger, *R. Wagner und A. Schröder-Devrient [-dĕ-vr'yăhn'], Wilhelmine, famous dramatic soprano; b. Hamburg, Dec. 6, 1804; d. Koburg, Jan. 26, 1860. Her father, Friedrich Schröder, was a baritone singer, and her mother an actress; she herself played children's parts, and was an actress until her 17th year. Her father died in 1818, and her mother was eng. at the Hofburg Th., Vienna, where J. Mazatti was her singing-teacher; her début in The Magic Flute at the Hofburg Th., 1821, was triumphantly successful; as Agathe in Der Freischütz she wholly won the hearts of the audience; but her grandest achievement was as Leonore on the revival of Fidelio in 1822, her wonderful interpretation of the part disclosing its beauties to the most doubtful critics. In 1823 she was engaged at the Court Opera in Dresden, and married the actor Karl Devrient (divorced 1828); until her retirement in 1847 she was always connected with that theatre, with brief interruptions during seasons in Paris, London (1832, '33 ,'37), and elsewhere. An offer to visit America in 1858 she had to decline because of the poor state of her health. Her vocal technic was not above criticism, but her dramatic fervor was irresistible.

Among her finest impersonations were Preciosa, Euryanthe, and Rezia (Weber), and Senta and Venus (Wagner); she created the rôle of Adriano Colonna in the latter's Rienzi (Oct. 20, 1842), Senta in Der fliegende Holländer (Jan. 2, 1843), and Venus in Tannhäuser (Oct. 21, 1845).—Bibliography: C. von Glümer, *Erinnerungen au W. In 1717 he began the study of theology in Leipzig, but in the same year became Lotti's music-copyist at Dresden; travelled 1720–4 in Germany, Holland and England with a German baron; lectured on music at Jena Univ., became organist at Minden in 1726, and at Nordhausen in 1732. —Works: 7 sets of church-cantatas for the entire church-year; a Passion, Die sieben Worte Jesu, for which he wrote the poem; 4 other Passions; secular serenades and cantatas; symphonies, overtures, concertos, sonatas; fugues and preludes f. organ; etc. —Umständliche Beschreibung eines neuerfundenen Clavierinstruments, auf welchem man in unterschiedenen Graden stark und schwach spielen kann (1763, in Marpurg's 'Kritische Briefe' [vol. ii]), in which he claims the invention, in 1717, of a hammer-action for keyed stringed instrs., a model of which (so he says) he laid before the Saxon court in 1721; his claim of priority in the invention of the pianoforte-action rests, however, on this bare assertion (cf. CRISTOFORI); Deutliche Anweisung zum Generalbass . . . (1772; the first book to represent the major and minor triads as the sole fundamental chords); Letzte Beschäftigung mit musikalischen Dingen; nebst sechs Temperaturplänen und einer Notentafel (1782); critical and polemical letters in Mizler's 'Bibliothek' and Marpurg's 'Critische Briefe.'—See Q.-Lex.

Schrö'ter, Corona (Elisabeth Wilhelmine), celebrated soprano; b. Guben, Jan. 14, 1751; d. Ilmenau, Aug. 23, 1802. Trained by her father, Joh. Fr. S., she sang at Leipzig, when 14, in a 'Grosses Concert,' and was eng. there till 1771; from 1778 she was Kammersängerin to the Dowager Duchess of Weimar, and a chief ornament of that brilliant court until 1786, after which she sang little in public. Goethe esteemed her highly as an actress. She also publ. 2 vols. of songs (1786 and 1794; repr. 1907).—Cf. Keil, C. S. Eine Lebensskizze . . . , being vol. ii of Vor 100 Jahren (Leipzig, 1875); H. Düntzer, Charlotte von Stein und C. S. (Stuttgart, 1876); P. Pasig, Goethe und C. S. (Ilmenau, 1902); H. S.* (Bielefeld, 1904).—Her brother, Johann Samuel (1750–1788), was pianist to the Prince of Wales and music-master to the Queen; publ. 15 pf.-concertos, 8 pf.-trios, 3 pf.-quintets, and 6 pf.-sonatas. —Another brother, Joh. Heinrich (b. 1762), a violinist, lived from 1782 in London, later in Paris; publ. pieces f. 2 violins and flute, and f. violin and 'cello.—See Q.-Lex.

Schrö'ter, Leonhard, eminent contrapuntist; b. Torgau, c. 1540; d. Magdeburg, 1595, as cantor of the Altstadt school.—Extant works: Motets a 4–8; 55 songs for German Protestants a 4–7 (1562); and a Te Deum (1576; reprinted in Vol. v of Ambros's History.—See Q.-Lex.

Schu'bart, (Christian Friedrich) Daniel, poet and musician; b. Sontheim, Swabia, April 13, 1739; d. Stuttgart, Oct. 10, 1791. Imprisoned 1777–87 on the Hohenasperg for political reasons (his 'impudence' in his paper, 'Deutsche Cronik'); then, in absurd contrast, created court poet and theatre-director at Stuttgart. In the prison he comp. an operetta, Die glücklichen Reisenden, a melodrama, Evas Klage bei des Messias Tod, pf.-pieces; in his Musicalische Rhapsodien (1786) are 2 cantatas, Die Macht der Tonkunst and Die Henne; also a vocal piece, Pätus und Arria (poem by Anfossi), songs, pf.-pieces, etc. His son Ludwig edited S.'s Ideen zu einer Aesthetik der Tonkunst (1806), written in the extravagant vein characteristic of his whole life.—Cf. Schubart's Leben und Gesinnungen von ihm selbst, im Kerker, aufgesetzt (2 vols.; Stuttgart, 1791–3); F. D. Strauss, Sch.'s Leben in seinen Briefen (2 vols; Berlin, 1849); H. Solcher, Sch. der Gefangene auf d. Hohenasperg (Bamberg, 1895); E. Holzer, Sch. als Musiker (Stuttgart, 1905). Schubaur [shoo'bowr], Johann Lukas, b. Lechfeld, Swabia, Dec. [bapt. 23], 1749; d. Munich, Nov. 15, 1815. While studying medicine in Vienna he earned his livelihood by giving music-lessons; began to practise in 1775 in Neuburg, but soon moved to Munich, where he became physician to the court and Pres. of the medical commission. He is musically important as one of the earliest and most successful representatives of the German 'Singspiel.' He wrote Melida (Munich, 1781; lost), Die Dorfdeputierten (ib., 1783), Das Lustlager (ib., 1784; lost), Die treuen Köhler (ib., 1786); also comp. Psalm 107, and a cantata, Il Sacrifizio.—Cf. E. Reipschläger, S., Danzi und Poissl als Opernkomponisten (Rostock, 1911).

Schu'bert, Ferdinand, brother of the great composer; b. Lichtenthal, n. Vienna, Oct. 18, 1794; d. Vienna, Feb. 26, 1859, as director of the Normal School of St. Anna. He was devoted to his gifted brother, and inherited the latter's literary remains.—Publ. a Tantum ergo, a Regina coeli, a German Requiem a 4 w. organ, part-songs, etc.; wrote much other church-music, a Requiem for Franz, 2 children's operas; etc. (all MS.).

Schu'bert, Franz (Peter), one of the most original and prolific vocal and instrumental composers of Germany; b. Lichtenthal, n. Vienna, Jan. 31, 1797; d. Vienna, Nov. 19, 1828. By his father, the schoolmaster at Lichtenthal, the gifted boy was taught violin-playing, and by choirmaster Holzer, in addition, the piano, organ, singing and thorough-bass, becoming first soprano in the church-choir in his tenth year; he also composed songs and little instrumental pieces. In 1808 he was admitted into the Vienna court choir as a singer, and also entered the 'Convict,' the training-school for the court singers. His teachers in theory were Ruczizka and Salieri. He also played in the school-orchestra, finally as 1st violin. His earliest extant song, Hagars Klage (dated Mar. 30, 1811), and several others of the period, show that Zumsteeg was his model at this time; he also continued instrumental composition, his first symphony being written in 1813. In this year, his voice breaking, he left the 'Convict,' but still studied hard under Salieri, as numerous Italian arias testify; his first mass was completed in 1814. Meantime, to escape military conscription, he hurriedly fitted for the post of elementary teacher in his father's school, and taught there until 1816. During these three years, the future grand master of the German Lied devoted his leisure to obtaining a thorough mastery of vocal expression. His usual method of composition was to jot down the melody with a sketch of the harmony, and then to write out the piece in full, following this first version by a second for the elimination of faults; when the second failed to satisfy him, the song was subjected to a third, or even a fourth, revision (e. g., Erlkönig, and Die Forelle). Such masterworks as Gretchen am Spinnrad (Oct. 19, 1814) and Erlkönig (1815) mark the swift and unique development of his genius. In the latter year he composed no less than 144 lyrics—in one day (Oct. 13) he wrote eight. This 'period of experimentation,' as it has been called, ceases in the conscious mastery attained in 1816–17. From 1814–16 he also composed 2 operettas, 3 Singspiele, and 3 other (fragmentary) stage-pieces, none of which were then performed; 4 masses, other church-music, etc. In 1816 his application for the directorship of the new State music-school at Laybach was rejected. He left his place in the Lichtenthal school, and thenceforward made Vienna his home, with the exception of two summers (1818 and 1824) spent at Zelész, Hungary, as music-teacher in Count Esterházy's family. From 1817 his friend Franz von Schober [1798–1883] generously aided him, often sharing lodgings and purse with the struggling artist. Through him, S. became acquainted with the famous tenor Michael Vogl, one of the first and greatest interpreters of his songs; through his influence S.'s mus. farce, Die Zwillingsbrüder, was brought out at the Kärnthnerthor Th. in 1820, but made little impression. In 1821, however, when he had already written over 600 compositions, his Erlkönig was sung at a public concert of the 'Musikverein' with great applause, and others followed at other concerts; so that Cappi and Diabelli were induced to publish on commission 20 songs (Erlkönig was the first) which were so successful that Diabelli assumed the risk of further publications; from 1826 his songs and piano-music had good sales. In 1822 he refused the proffered position of organist at the court chapel; but all subsequent efforts to obtain a salaried post were unsuccessful; that of Vice-Kapellm. to the court, for which he applied in 1826, was given to Weigl; his friends failed to obtain a similar position for him in Hamburg; and the conductorship of the Kärnthnerthor Th. was also refused him in 1827. Not until March 26, 1828, did he give a public concert of his own works (the E♭ trio, a movement from the D m. quartet, songs, etc.), which was an artistic and pecuniary success. Excepting such occasional and momentary good fortune, his life was a continual battle for the daily means of subsistence; although his genius was fully recognized by musicians like Salieri, Weigl, and the singer Vogl, and his songs were highly praised by Beethoven, he was wretchedly underpaid by his publishers, and his greatest works were almost totally neglected. His wonderful gifts, and genial and buoyant disposition, won many friends; chief among them the poet Mayrhofer, the family von Sonnleitner (at whose house S.'s compositions were often performed long before their introduction to the public), Baron von Schönstein (whose singing aided in bringing S.'s lyrical songs into vogue), Moritz Schwind and Anselm Hüttenbrenner. Two visits which S. paid to Beethoven are recorded; but they were never intimate. For months previous to his death, S. had been failing; his final illness was brought to a fatal termination by an attack of typhus. He was buried, at his own desire, in the 'Ostfriedhof' at Währing, his grave being the third from Beethoven's. When, in 1888, the remains of both masters were transferred to the 'Zentralfriedhof' the new graves also were only a few feet apart. In 1897 Brahms was buried close by. In 1872 a statue of S. (by Kundmann) was unveiled in the Vienna Stadtpark.

Schubert was the least 'schooled' of all great German musicians. For this lack of training, his keen musical intuition and inexhaustible resources of melody amply compensated. He is one of the grandest 'impressionists' of all time. The spontaneity and fecundity of his song-composition are not more astounding than the perfection with which the music—melody and accompaniment—fit the poem. He is regarded as the creator of the modern German Lied. His known songs for solo voice with pf.-accomp. number 603. As to his alleged carelessness in choice of subjects for musical setting, the fact is that he took 72 poems by Goethe, 46 by Schiller, 44 by Wilhelm Müller, 28 by Matthison, 23 by Hölty, 22 by Kosegarten, 13 by Körner, etc.—that is, the best at his command. He also set 47 poems by Mayrhofer and 12 by v. Schober, both his warm personal friends. Of Heine (then a newcomer) he composed only 6 numbers (in the 'Schwanengesang'). Equally genial is his transference of the 'Liedform' to the pianoforte in the 'Moments musicaux' and Impromptus—a miniature form of piano-composition extensively copied. In larger forms, his symphony in C, and the unfinished symphony in B minor, are equal to the best after Beethoven—and S. was but 31 when he died.

A complete critical edition of Schubert's works in 40 vols (21 series), edited by E. Mandyczewski (assisted by Brahms, Brüll, Hellmesberger, J. N. Fuchs, etc.) was publ. from 1888–97 by Breitkopf & Härtel, in whose 'Mittheilungen,' Nos. 28, 36, and 43, may be found full lists of his instrl. and vocal music, and songs for one voice, respectively. Nottebohm's 'Thematic Catalogue' (1874) and Grove's Dictionary, may also be consulted. Since the publication of the monumental edition Max Friedländer discovered the MS. of about 100 lost songs, which were first publ. in Peters' complete ed. of the songs (7 vols.). Among numerous editions of S.'s favorite songs with English translations, that publ. by G. Schirmer, New York, is decidedly the best.

Hofrat' in 1899. In 1897 the Emperor of Austria raised him to the rank of the hereditary nobility. During the four decades of his sway —he had practically unlimited authority— the Dresden opera maintained its tradition (established by Weber and Wagner) and reputation as one of the finest opera-houses in the world for general excellence in all departments. S. was not only an inspired leader, but a strict disciplinarian and untiring drillmaster. He was particularly fortunate in his choice of novelties (Strauss's Feuersnot, Salome, Elektra and Rosenkavalier had their world-premières under his direction) and engagement of young singers, who almost always became famous. He seldom left Dresden, the most extensive tour ever undertaken being to New York in the spring of 1900 to direct 3 orchl. concerts at the M. O. H. In 1875 he married Clementine Proska (recte Procházka; born Ödenburg, Feb. 12, 1853), who was the principal coloratura soprano under his direction from 1873 to her retirement in 1895. Their daughter, Lisel, has been coloratura soprano at the Dresden opera since 1914.—Cf. L. Hartmann, E. S. und das moderne Kapellmeistertum, in 'Nord und Süd' (May, 1896; Breslau); P. He never undertook private concert-tours, but was heard frequently as soloist at the concerts of the organizations with which he was connected, and gave occasional re-

As a teacher also he was highly successful; in Chicago he cond. the 'Vienna Harp Coll.' and had establ. regular summer courses at Bad Kreuznach, which were attended by many American pupils. Schön and several other professors advised him to devote himself to music. From 1862–5 he was a pupil at the Leipzig Cons. of Moscheles (pf.), F. S. Richter (harm.) and M. Schu'mann, Clara (Josephine), née Wieck, b. Leipzig, Sept. 13, 1819; d. Frankfort-on-Main, May 20, 1896. An exceptionally gifted pianist, the daughter and pupil of Friedrich Wieck, and the wife of Robert Schumann. Trained from her fifth year, she played in public for the first time on Oct. 20, 1828; at the Gewandhaus on Nov. 8, 1830; made tours from 1832; and during a sojourn in Vienna (1836) received the title of Imp. Chamber-virtuoso. At Paris she had great success in 1839. On Sept. 12, 1840, she was married to Schumann (q.v.). After his death she went with her children to Berlin, living for some years with her mother, who had been divorced from Wieck and had married the music-teacher Adolf Bargiel (d. Feb. 4, 1841; father of Woldemar B.). In 1863 she went to Lichtenthal, n. Baden-Baden, and resumed her concert-work, both to support her children and because public appearances were a necessity to her. From 1878–92 she was teacher of pf.-playing in the Hoch Cons., Frankfort. At first a Beethoven player, Frau Schumann became under her husband's influence a masterly and authoritative interpreter of the latter's compositions and Chopin's works; later she became an equally admirable interpreter of Brahms, her lifelong friend. However, she never was a 'specialist'; her chief claim to distinction as one of the world's great pianists was her universality, her sound musicianship impressing the stamp

Schu'mann, Robert (Alexander), a leader in German romanticism; b. Zwickau, Saxony, June 8, 1810; d. Endenich, near Bonn, July 29, 1856. The youngest son of his father, a bookseller, his first music-lessons were on the piano from the organist of the Marienkirche, Kuntzsch. His attempts at composition date from his seventh year; in his eleventh, without instruction, he wrote choral and orchestral works, and at this time his father wished him to study under Carl M. von Weber, but negotiations to that effect came to naught. Instead, he attended the Zwickau Gymnasium from 1820–8; toward the end of this term developing a marked predilection for the romantic works of Byron and Jean Paul Richter. In 1826 his father died; and in 1828 S. matriculated at Leipzig Univ. as Studiosus juris, though he gave more attention to the philosophical lectures. In 1829 he repaired to Heidelberg, drawn thither chiefly by the fame of Thibaut (prof. of law, but a profound student of music), and now began to apply himself seriously to musical study, aided by his dexterity as a pianist. In the autumn of 1830 he obtained his mother's permission to return to Leipzig in order to devote himself to music. He lived with Friedrich Wieck, under whom he studied the piano; and also took a course in composition under H. Dorn, though his industry was principally concentrated on piano-practice. An unfortunate experiment (the endeavor to obtain independence of the fingers by suspending the fourth finger of the right hand in a sling while practising with the others) ended his bright prospects as a piano-virtuoso. Thenceforward he gave himself up to composition and literary work. As a composer, his published works (op. 1–23) up to the beginning of 1840 (an important date) are exclusively for the piano; Liszt, Henselt, and Clara Wieck (the daughter of his instructor and host) played them in public. In 1834 S. founded, with J. Knorr, L. Schunke and Wieck, the 'Neue Zeitschrift für Musik,' which S. edited alone from 1835–44. It entered the field as an exponent of liberal and progressive musical art, in opposition to the vapid productions of the Italian stage, to the then fashionable pianists, and to all shallow or retrograde tendencies. Schumann's numerous essays and criticisms (signed Florestan, Eusebius, Meister Raro, or with the numerals '2' and '12') show what musical journalism can be when actuated by the loftiest motives, and based on real and intimate knowledge of the subjects treated. During the succeeding decades it exercised a potent influence for good; S. was among the first to herald Chopin's genius (1834); and one of his last papers was the famous 'Neue Bahnen' (1853) on Brahms. In the meantime he had fallen in love with Clara Wieck; owing to her father's determined opposition their marriage did not take place until 1840, the year in which the degree of Dr. phil. was conferred upon S. by the University of Jena. He had spent one year, 1838–9, in Vienna, hoping to better his fortunes by establishing himself and his paper in that city—an attempt which failed. From his marriage-year, too, dates the beginning of his career as a song-composer, and some of his finest lyrical gems were then produced, numbering nearly a score of books, among them op. 25, 31, 36, and 40. In 1841 he wrote his first symphony, speedily followed by three string-quartets, op. 41, the pf.-quintet, op. 44, and the pf.-quartet, op. 47; also his most beautiful choral work, Das Paradies und die Peri (1843). In this last-named year he was invited by Mendelssohn to accept the position of teacher (of playing from score) at the newly founded Conservatorium; it is of interest to note that S. introduced the pedal-piano, for preparatory organ-practice, into the Cons., which possessed no organ for ten years. In January, 1844, he undertook a concert-tour to Russia with his wife; in the autumn of the same year he removed to Dresden; his duties in the Cons. were uncongenial, and it is probable that Mendelssohn, whom S. greatly admired, did not fully appreciate the latter's genius. S. likewise retired from the editorship of the 'Neue Zeitschrift,' being succeeded in 1845 by Dr. Brendel. In Dresden he lived until 1850, giving private lessons and composing industriously; to this period belong the great C-major symphony op. 61 (1846), the opera Genoveva (1848), and the pf.-trio op. 80 (1847; one of the finest of its class). In 1847 he became the conductor of the 'Liedertafel,' and in 1848 organized the 'Chorgesang-Verein.' He was called to Düsseldorf in 1850 to succeed Ferd. Hiller as town musical director (cond. of the Subscription Concerts and the Musical Society). He held this position until the autumn of 1853, when signs of insanity, which had appeared as far back as 1833, and still more alarmingly in 1845, compelled him to resign; for some time his assistant (and successor) Tausch had relieved him of much of the work. On Feb. 6, 1854, the disorder reached a climax; he abruptly left the room in which some friends were assembled, and threw himself into the Rhine; rescued from drowning, he had to be conveyed to an asylum at Endenich, near Bonn, remaining here, with but few lucid intervals, until the end. In 1880 a monument by Prof. Donndorf was erected on his grave in the churchyard at Bonn, opposite the Sternentor; a statue was unveiled at Zwickau in 1889; a modest memorial also stands, since 1875, near the First Bürgerschule in Leipzig.

S. was a founder of the neo-romantic school, and perhaps its most powerful promoter both as a composer and writer. At the very outset, his individuality found full expression. His mastery of detail, his concentrated passion and profound emotion, are displayed to best advantage in the smaller forms, the piano-pieces and songs—the most suitable mediums for presenting the subtle shadings and artistic refinements characteristic of his lyrical genius. In them he attains perfection of expression and artistic finish. Yet—to name but a few—the first two symphonies, and the pf.-concerto op. 54, are unsurpassed in the post-Beethoven epoch; the pf.-quintet, the Études symphoniques, the C major Fantasie, the F♯-minor and the G-minor pf.-sonatas, rank with the grandest works of their kind. His songs differ from those of Schubert in a greater elaboration of the piano-part; while as a composer for the pianoforte his importance cannot very well be overestimated. Together with Chopin and Liszt—yet quite independent of either—he must be regarded as the founder of the modern piano-technic, exploiting the utmost possibilities of the instrument.—A complete edition of his compositions, in 34 vols., edited by Clara Schumann, was publ. by Breitkopf & Härtel (1886–93); in 1893 Brahms edited a supplementary volume.

Schumann-Heink (née Rössler), Ernestine, famous operatic and concert-contralto; b. Lieben, n. Prague, June 15, 1861. Her mother, an Italian, taught her to sing by ear (until the age of 9) all the operatic airs popular at the time. In 1872 she was sent to the Ursuline Convent in Prague, where, because of her fine voice, she sang the solos in the church-choir, but did not receive any systematic instruction. Two years later her father, an officer in the Austrian army, was transferred to Graz, where she had her first lessons from Marietta von Leclair. There her first public appearance took place at a concert of the 'Akademischer Gesangverein,' when she sang the contralto solo in the Ninth Symphony (1876). The intendant of the Dresden opera immediately engaged her (operatic début at the Hofoper as Azucena on Oct. 13, 1878); she was also app. soloist at the Cath. Realizing that her training had been inadequate, she remedied this shortcoming by diligent study under Prof. Krebs and Franz Wüllner. In 1883 she became a member of the Hamburg Stadtth., becoming a prime favorite, and winning the good will of the influential director, Pollini, by assuming on very short notice parts then entirely new to her (Carmen, Fides, Ortrud). When Pollini in 1892 brought his company to Covent Garden she made a profound impression at her London début as Erda (June 8); she sang there again in 1897 and '98 (chiefly Wagner rôles). Meantime she appeared in the principal German cities in concert, oratorio and at festivals; in the summer of 1887 she first sang at Berlin in opera at Kroll's Th. In 1896 Mme. Wagner invited her to sing in the Ring performances at Bayreuth (Erda, Waltraute and the First Norn); from then until 1906, excepting 1904, she took active part in every Bayreuth festival (Mary, Ortrud, Brangäne, Magdalene, Fricka). In 1898 she signed a contract for ten years with the R. Opera in Berlin; in order to enable her to accept an offer made at that time by Maurice Grau for the M. O. H., a 4-years' leave of absence during the winter months was granted her. Her Amer. début took place as Ortrud on Nov. 7, 1898, in Chicago; she was first heard at the M. O. H. in the same rôle on Jan. 9, 1899. Her success was instantaneous and overwhelming. When her leave from Berlin had expired, she signed a new contract with Grau, and paid a fine of 10,000 marks to the R. Opera; two years later she was released from her Berlin contract on payment of 25,000 marks. During the season of 1903–4 she made her first extended concert-tour of the U. S. (covering 40,000 miles) with phenomenal success. At the conclusion she was persuaded to try comic opera, and during 1904–5 she toured the country in Love's Lottery (specially written for her). After a brief rest in Germany she appeared again in grand opera and concerts; since leaving the M. O. H. as a regular member in 1904 she has appeared but rarely on the operatic stage (M. O. H., Manhattan Opera House, Chicago Opera Co.). During the winter of 1908–9 she made a tour of Germany, England, France, Belgium and Austria, appearing in opera and concert, and creating the rôle of Klytemnestra in Strauss's Elektra (Dresden, Jan. 25, 1909). On her annual concert-tours she appears in more than 100 concerts; her operatic répertoire includes about 150 rôles; her voice, perfectly even throughout, and of extraordinary beauty and power, has a range from d to b^2. —She was married (1882) to Ernst Heink of Dresden, from whom she was later divorced; in 1893 she married the actor Paul Schumann in Hamburg, who died in 1904; her third husband was a Chicago lawyer, William Rapp, Jr., whom she married in 1905, and from whom she was div. in 1914. In 1908 she was admitted to citizenship in the U. S.

Schü'nemann, Georg, b. Berlin, March 13, 1884. Pupil of Stern's Cons.; then st. musicology at Leipzig Univ. (Dr. phil. in 1907 with the dissertation Das Taktschlagen in der Mensuralmusik). Schütz [Sagitta'rius], Heinrich, the most influential German composer of the 17th century in developing and promoting good church-music, and a worthy forerunner of Bach; b. Köstritz, Saxony, Oct. 8, 1585; d. Dresden, Nov. 6, 1672. In 1599 he became a choir-boy in the court chapel at Cassel, also taking the gymnasial course, and entering Marburg Univ. in 1607, at his parents' desire, to study law; but was sent to Venice in 1609, by Landgrave Moritz of Hesse-Cassel, to study under Giov. Gabrieli, remaining here till after the latter's death in 1612. Returning to Cassel, he became court organist; in 1617 he was app. Kapellm. to the Elector of Saxony at Dresden, after having acted in that capacity since 1615. He repeatedly revisited Italy; from 1631, amid the distractions of the 30 Years' War, he made protracted visits to Copenhagen (in 1633–5, 1637–8, and 1642–5), where he officiated as court conductor, the Dresden court orch. having been wholly dissolved during 6 years (1633–9), and then reorganized with only ten instrumentalists and singers; after 1645 it attained the former standard of efficiency.—Standing at the parting of the ways between Palestrina and Bach, Schütz was of peculiar importance in German art through having applied the grand Italian choral style, and the new dramatico-monodic style (of Monteverde and his predecessors), to the development of a semi-dramatic church-music which is not merely of historical interest as preparing the mightier Bach epoch, but of pleasing and powerful effect at the present day. S. was also the composer of the first German opera, Dafne, set to Opitz's translation of Rinuccini's libretto (prod. Schloss Hartenfels, n. Torgau, 1627, at the wedding of Princess Sophie of Saxony), and of a ballet, Orpheus und Eurydice (1638, on the wedding of Johann Georg II. of Saxony); the music of both is lost. The late Karl Riedel did much to awaken appreciation of S.'s merits by publishing and producing Die 7 Worte Christi am Kreuz, and by bringing out other of his works, notably a Passion consisting of selections from S.'s Historia des Leidens . . . Jesu Christi [see below]. From 1885–94 Breitkopf & Härtel publ. a complete edition of S.'s works in 16 vols., ed. by Philipp Spitta: Vol. I, Die evangelischen Historien und die Sieben Worte Jesu Christi am Kreuz; the Historien being (1) Die Historia des Leidens und Sterbens unsers Heylandes Jesu Christi (4 Passions after the Evangelists; MS. in the Dresden Library), and (2) Historia der fröhlichen und siegreichen Auferstehung unsers einigen Erlösers und Seligmachers Jesu Christi (first publ. 1623; similar to the Passions); Vols. II–III, Mehrchörige Psalmen mit Instrumenten, with continuo (first publ. 1619); Vol. IV, Cantiones sacrae a 4 w. continuo; Vol. V, Symphoniae sacrae, Part I; Vol. VI, Kleine geistliche Concerte a 1–5; Vol. VII, Symphoniae sacrae, Part II; Vol. VIII, sacred choral music, containing Musicalia ad chorum sacrum, w. continuo (1648); Vol. IX, Italienische Madrigale, containing his first publ. work, sent home from Italy, and dedicated to the Landgrave, Il primo libro dei Madrigale (1611; 18 madrigals a 5 and a Dialog a 8); Vol. X–XI, Symphoniae sacrae, Part III; Vol. XII–XV, Gesammelte Motetten, Concerte, Madrigale und Arien; Vol. XVI, Psalmen Davids deutsch durch Cornelium

Scott, Cyril Meir, b. Oxton, Cheshire, Sept. 27, 1879. Pupil of I. Knorr at Hoch's Cons. in Frankfort-on-Main. As a composer he adopted in toto Debussy's principles and method, and completely identified himself with the style of the French master. He is not so much the 'English counterpart to D.' [Grove], as his English double; for, unlike most imitators, S. has caught the essentials, the very spirit of impressionism, so that his best works might easily be ascribed to D. This can, perhaps, be explained on the ground of identical natural endowment, for neither composer can think music in terms of his predecessors. S. is also a theosophist and a student of, and lecturer on, occult philosophy, and a thorough believer in the relation between tones and colors; he has written extensively on esthetics and the occult aspects of music.—Works: For orch., a symphony; 4 overtures, Christmas, Princesse Maleine, Aglavaine et Sélysette, Pelléas et Mélisande; 2 Rhapsodies; Aubade; Arabesque; Three Dances; a pf.-concerto.—Vocal w. orch., La belle Dame sans merci for sop. and bar.; Helen of Kirkconnel for bar.; Nativity Hymn for ch. —Chamber-music, pf.-sextet, op. 26; pf.-quintet, op. 57; 2 str.-quartets, op. 28 and 31; vl.-sonata, op. 59; Tallahassee, suite for vl. and pf.—Numerous comps. for pf. (sonata, 2 suites, etc.) and songs (My Captain, A Reflection, Afterday, Lovely kind and kindly lovely, etc.). Has publ. The Philosophy of Modernism (1917).—Cf. D. C. The immense success of some performances of Wagner's works given by Walter Damrosch in 1894 and '95 decided Mr. Grau to include these works in the regular season at the M. O. Singing for Mahler in 1903, he was immediately eng. for 5 years at the Hofoper in Vienna; début there in grand opera as Max (Freischütz), and soon added the Wagnerian rôles to his répertoire; he also studied the literature of the Lied with Gustav Walter. Released from his contract after the fourth year, he sang at the Hofoper in Dresden from 1907–13, with leave of absence for study with Jean de Reszké in Paris (1911–12). In 1910, début at Covent Garden; although he was eng. for each of the 3 following seasons, he could not fulfill his contract because the Dresden intendancy refused the necessary leave, for S. had become the most popular tenor at the Hofoper; he then handed in his resignation, which was not accepted until after his tenth formal request. In Feb., 1914, he reappeared in London, singing Joseph (Méhul), Lohengrin, Walther von Stolzing, Loge and Parsifal; in the last rôle, out of 20 performances, he sang in 13. Having made his début at the R. Sem'brich [zĕhm'briyh], Marcella [real name Praxede Marcelline Kochanska; Sembrich was her mother's maiden-name], famous operatic soprano (coloratura) and Lieder-singer; b. Wisniewczyk, Galicia, Feb. 15, 1858. From the age of 4 her father, Kasimir Kochanski, a musician, gave her pf.-lessons; violin-lessons were soon added. At 10 she appeared in public as a performer on both instruments. In 1869 her father sent her to the Lemberg Cons., where she remained 4 years, studying pf. with W. Stengel and vl. with Brustermann, also singing in the Cons. chorus. In 1874 she played for Liszt one of his own rhapsodies; taking her violin, she then played a difficult arrangement of Polish melodies by Wieniawski, and in conclusion sang, although she had never had a vocal lesson. Having commended her playing, the master concluded: "Sing! Sing for the world, for your voice is that of an angel." Stengel then had her sing for J. Epstein and J. Hellmesberger, and their verdict agreed with Liszt's. From 1875–6 she st. singing with Viktor Rokitansky in Vienna, then went to Milan, chiefly to learn Italian, but also took singing-lessons from G. B. Lamperti, Jr., for 8 months. On May 5, 1877, she married her former teacher, W. Stengel (b. Lemberg, Aug. 7, 1846; d. New York, May 15, 1917), and with him went to Athens, where she made her operatic début on June 3, 1877, as Elvira in Bellini's Puritani; after singing there with great applause for 2 months, she returned to Vienna, and st. the German répertoire with Richard

Lewy. At Dresden, in Oct., 1878, she began a 2 years' engagement with a highly successful interpretation of Lucia. London début (Lucia) on June 12, 1880, and sang there for for the next 5 seasons; Amer. début (in the same rôle) in New York (M. O. H.), Oct. 24, 1883. She spent the summer of 1884 in further study with Francesco Lamperti in Milan. Thereafter she sang at the principal opera houses of Germany, Austria, France, Spain, Scandinavia and Russia until 1898, then becoming a regular member of the M. O. H. Until her retirement (1909), she sang during the winter in the U. S. and during the summer in Austria. At her farewell appearance in opera (M. O. H., Feb. 6, 1909), she received an almost unprecedented ovation, and was elected an honorary member of the Metropolitan company. For many years she was regarded as the foremost living exponent of the school of 'Bel Canto.' She never attempted Wagner (nor the later Verdi), save the one rôle admirably suited to her voice, Eva, of which she was an ideal interpreter. When she retired from the stage, she was still at the height of her powers. Her concert-career was concurrent with the operatic (as early as 1880 she appeared as soloist at a Nether-Rhenish music-fest.), and extends beyond it to the present day (1917). The compass of her voice is from c'–f^3, with a special brilliance in the upper register. Of her 40 operatic rôles, Violetta was the favorite; as Rosina she has perhaps never been equalled; she was unsurpassable as Zerlina, Susanna, Gilda, Amina, Dinorah, Marguerite, etc. Her concert-répertoire embraces all the masterpieces of the Lied literature. She sings equally well in English, German, Italian, French, Polish and Russian. Soon after the outbreak of the war she and her husband came to New York, where in 1915 she became Pres. of the Amer.-Polish Relief Committee. —Cf. G. Armin, M. S. und Herr Prof. Jul. Hey (Leipzig, 1898).

Sgamba'ti, Giovanni, b. Rome, May 18, 1843; d. there Dec. 14, 1914. Pianist; pupil of Aldega, Barbieri and Natalucci; played in public at 6, sang in church and conducted small orchestras. His pianistic education was finished under Liszt at Rome. S. now gave orchl. concerts, producing German masterpieces, conducting Liszt's Dante symphony and Beethoven's Eroica in 1866. Although not given at regular periods, he cond. these symphonic concerts throughout his life with great artistic, though little popular, success. Historically these concerts are important as the first systematic attempt to educate the Italian public to an appreciation of absolute music by producing masterpieces by classic composers and contemporaries (Schumann, Brahms and Saint-Saëns). S. appeared both as cond. and pianist. Later he made concert-tours in Italy and Germany. In 1869 he establ. a free pf.-class annexed to the Accad. di S. Cecilia in Rome, which in 1877, after instruction had been extended to other branches, was formally recognized and establ. by the government as the 'Liceo Musicale'; for years one of the foremost music-schools of Italy. Until his death, S. was the active head of the pf.-dept. He was pianist and dir. of Queen Margherita's Quintet, and in 1903 the King made him Commander of the Order of SS. Maurice and Lazarus. An ardent admirer of Wagner, he made his acquaintance in 1876 at a musicale given in the master's honor, when S.'s two pf.-quintets (op. 4 and 5) were performed. These pleased W. so much that on the following evening they were repeated for him privately. Wagner then strongly recommended S. to his own publishers, Schott of Mayence, who immediately brought out both quintets and a Prelude and Fugue for pf. (op. 6); subsequently they publ. all his works.—As a performer and teacher S. was always regarded highly in Italy; as a composer he won immediate recognition in Germany, while in Italy (excepting the court) his importance was not understood until recently, after his labors in behalf of instrumental music had begun to bear fruit. Although not a composer of strongly pronounced individuality he is prominent in the history of nineteenth-century Italian music as one of the earliest, and perhaps the greatest, of the few Italian composers who have successfully cultivated instrumental music.—Publ. works: Op. 4 pf.-quintet in F m.; op. 5, do. in B♭; op. 15, pf.-concerto in G m.; op. 16, symphony in D; op. 17, str.-quartet in D♭ (last movem. in C♯ m.); op. 28, Te Deum laudamus for full orch. (also for str.-orch. and org.); op. 34, Versa est in luctum cythara mea for bar. solo, ch., organ and orch. (later included in op. 38); op. 38, Messa da Requiem for bar. solo, ch., organ and orch.; pcs. for vl. and pf. (op. 24, 29); songs (op. 1, 2, 32, 35, 37, 41; and 12 without opus-number); pf.-pcs. (op. 6, Prelude and Fugue in E♭ m.; op. 12, Fogli volanti; op. 21, Suite; op. 23, Pièces lyriques; op. 36, Mélodies poétiques; 6 nocturnes, op. 3, 20 [3], 31, 33; etc.); also Formulario del pianista (a coll. of fundamental technical exercises). Elected Mendelssohn Scholar in 1871 for pf.-playing and composition (a pf.-concerto, pf.-trio, pf.-sonata, Caprice f. pf. w. orch.); went to Leipzig for study under Reinecke, and in 1872 repaired to Milan for the cultivation of his fine tenor voice (with Lamperti for 2½ years). influence of Mendelssohn and Bennett; besides the above, he has written a Dramatic Overture (1874), other overtures, a symphony, 2 string-quartets; also a valuable book, The Art of Singing (2 parts; 1900, '01).

Sha'liapin, Fedor Ivanovitch, celebrated Russian basso profundo; b. Kazan, Feb. 11, 1873. Without previous training in music he joined, in 1890, the chorus of a travelling operetta company; before long the magnificent natural quality of his voice attracted the director's attention, and he was entrusted with leading rôles. From 1892–3 he studied with Usatov in Tiflis, and in 1894 appeared in grand opera in Petrograd, at first during the summer season, later at the Maryinsky Th. His great reputation dates from his engagement at Mamontov's Private Opera in Moscow (1896). His voice, ranging from A_1-e^1, possesses power, beauty and flexibility; his intense portrayal of national types in Russian operas has made him a prime favorite among his countrymen; his defective education, however, seemingly prevents similar successes in operas other than Russian. In a season of Russian opera in Paris (spring of 1906) his appearances were a succession of triumphs, and led to his engagement at the M. O. H. (1906–7), where his interpretation of French and Italian rôles made little impression; although he sang 3 seasons at La Scala (1901, '04 and '08), he won real success in only a single rôle (Mefistofele, in Boito's opera).

Sibelius [sĭ-bā'l'yŏŏs], Jean, b. Tavastehus, Finland, Dec. 8, 1865. At 14 he began to study the violin with Levander, the bandmaster in his native town, and soon took part in amateur performances of chamber-music; he wrote his first compositions before he had any theoretical instruction. Sent to the Univ. at Helsingfors in 1885, to study law, he abandoned it before the end of his first semester, and ent. the Cons., studying (1886–9) vl. with Vasiliev and Csillag and comp. with Wegelius; 1889–90, pupil of W. Bargiel and A. Becker in Berlin; 1890–1, of R. Fuchs (comp.) and K. Goldmark (instrumentation) in Vienna. In 1893 he was app. teacher of comp. at the Helsingfors Cons., also at the orchestra-school of the Philh. Soc. When his first works appeared in print, they attracted so much attention that in 1897 the Finnish senate granted him an annual stipend of 3000 marks [$600] for 10 years. In 1900 he accompanied the Helsingfors Philh. Orch. on its tour of Scandinavia, Germany, France and Belgium, as cond. of his own works; in 1901 he directed his own works at the annual festival of the 'Allgem. deutscher Tonkünstlerverein' at Heidelberg. By request of Karl Stoeckel he wrote for the 28th annual Norfolk (Conn.) Fest. the symphonic poem Aalottaret [Die Okeaniden; Daughters of the Ocean], which he cond. there in a program of his works on June 4, 1914; on that occasion Yale Univ. conferred upon him the degree of Mus. Doc. (hon. c.). He lives in Järvenpää, devoting himself to composition.—Sibelius is the greatest of Finnish composers. To Pacius, Wegelius and Kajanus belongs the honor of having founded a distinct national school, but in the works of S. the national genius finds its most eloquent expression. S.'s works have roused the interest of Europe and North America in this new national school. His art rests upon the folk-music, and his original themes exhibit all the characteristics of genuine folk-melodies. What gives the strongly individual note to his music is the inherent power of his themes, combined with marked originality and resourcefulness in their development. The prevailing mood is sombre, even tragic. Nature and the national legends (the Kalevala) are the chief sources of S.'s inspiration.—Cf. K. Flodin, Finska musiker (Stockholm, 1900); R. Newmarch, J. S., a Finnish Composer (Leipzig, 1906; Ger. tr. by L. Kirschbaum, ib., 1906); W. Niemann, Die Musik Skandinaviens (Leipzig, 1906).

Sie'rov [s'yĕh'rŏhv], Alexander Nikolaievitch, b. Petrograd, Jan. 23, 1820; d. there Feb. 1, 1871. He had lessons in 'cello-playing from Carl Schuberth, but was a lawyer by profession, and held a government office in the Crimea when, in 1850, he turned wholly to music, beginning as a critic of advanced views, and an adherent of Wagner; he twice attempted to establish a paper; and publ. essays on Russian Folk-song in the 'Moszkva' and the 'Musical Season.' In 1865 he lectured at the Univ. of Moscow on mus. history; and in 1859 and 1864 at the Univ. of Petrograd on mus. theory and dramatic composition. After his début as a dramatic composer, at Petrograd in 1863, with the grand opera Judith, the Czar granted him a pension; his grand opera Rognieda (1865) had equal good fortune, and he commenced the composition of the opera Vrazhia sila [The Power of the Enemy] in 5 acts; death overtook him while the fifth act was still incomplete (it was finished by his wife [see SIEROVA] and scored by Soloviev, and prod. April 19, 1871, becoming extremely popular). Another opera, Notch pod rozhdestvo [Christmas Eve] did not progress beyond a first rough sketch, from which his wife arr. and publ. a Suite (1877). S. followed Wagner's example in writing his own libretti; as a national composer he ranks next to Glinka in Russian estimation. He also comp. Schiller's Glocke, an Ave Maria (written 1868 for Adelina Patti), a Stabat Mater, incid. music to Nero, Danse cosaque for orch., several Little-Russian dances and an Ouverture d'une comédie for pf. The next ten years he spent experimenting with a new method, which he claims leads to absolute virtuosity in two years. Resuming his concert-tours in Europe, he met with considerable success. In 1915 he establ. in New York a virtuoso-school to introduce his method.—Publ. Serenata espagnola for vl. and pf., and pf.-pcs. He built 47 organs, the finest of which is that in Freiberg Cathedral (3 manuals and 45 stops; 1714). He is yet more famous as the first to manufacture pianofortes successfully, his hammer-action being practically identical with that of Cristofori, the inventor of the pianoforte. Lindeman in Trondheim; 1874–7, at the Leipzig Cons., pupil of Reinecke (pf.), Schradieck (vl.), Jadassohn (cpt. and comp.) and Kretzschmar (musicol.). He settled in Christiania as a teacher and composer, when he won a government stipend which enabled him to continue his studies in Berlin, Dresden and Munich (1880–2). In Germany he wrote several important works, which were performed and attracted attention. Returning to his native land, his fame grew rapidly, so that in 1890 the government granted him a yearly stipend enabling him to devote his entire time to comp. S.'s talent is of the heroic type, and shows to best advantage in the larger forms; in the smaller forms he lacks the distinction of Grieg. Skinner, Ernest M., born Clarion, Pa., 1866; founder (1901) of the Ernest M. Skinner Co., famous organ-builders of Dorchester, Mass. Until 1905 the business was carried on by Mr. S. himself; it was then incorporated, with Mr. S. as Pres., M. J. Whittall, Vice-pres., A. Thomas, Treas., and G. F. Peabody, member of the board of directors.—S. has been especially successful in the construction of organ-pipes reproducing the exact tone-color of the various wood-wind instrs. and the French horn; among several important inventions may be mentioned the 'duplex wind-chest,' by means of which the stops of 2 manuals are made interchangeable, and the arrangement of placing the stops on swinging sides. S. invented in 1901 a device for accenting certain notes in piano-players, so as to bring out melodies in the bass or inner voices; he sold the patent to the Æolian Company, who introduced it into their instruments under the name of 'themodist.' His latest invention is an automatic organ called the 'Orchestrator,' on which it is possible to sound all tones of a chord either in the same clang-tint, or to sound each tone in a different tint (fl., clar., bassoon, etc.). Famous organs built by the S. Co. are those in the Coll. of the City of N. Y., St. Paul's Chapel, Columbia Univ., Cath. of St. John the Divine, St. Thomas's Ch., Fifth Ave. Presb. Ch. (New York); Old South Ch. (Boston); Trinity Cath. (Cleveland, O.); Cath. of SS. Peter and Paul (Washington); St. Paul's P. E. Ch. (Baltimore); Fourth Presb. Ch. (Chicago); Central Meth. Skriabin [skryah'bĭn], Alexander Nikolaievitch, b. Moscow, Jan. 10, 1872; d. there April 27, 1915. Destined for a military career, he received his early education in the Cadet Corps; then pupil of Safonov (pf.) and Taneiev (comp.) at the Moscow Cons., graduating in 1892 as winner of the gold medal for pf.-playing. The next few years he lived chiefly in Paris, Brussels and Amsterdam, establishing a considerable reputation as a pianist; 1898–1903, prof. of pf. at the Moscow Cons.; from then until his death he devoted his entire time to comp. His earlier works (to about op. 20), all for pf., are remarkable for fine workmanship and poetic conception, and exhibit sufficient originality to warrant the hopes entertained at the time for the composer's future development. Instead of continuing in the paths of romanticism, he espoused impressionism, and soon passed to the very extremes of futurism. No longer satisfied with the whole-tone scale and the extension of harmony by means of a limited number of the upper partial tones, he adopted practically the entire series, treating the most dissonant and discordant combinations as concords. A. E. Hull summarizes S.'s system as follows: "A certain new chord is taken which suits the particular moods that are crying out for expression, and the whole composition is evolved from this one extended harmony, used only on a very few roots, often two or three, sometimes even on only one. This new harmonic style involves a complete revolution in the musical system. The old major and minor modes disappear, the key-signature goes; and for variety he depends entirely on the apparently inexhaustible combination of these harmonics, which he uses in endless arrangements for figurations, chords, accompaniments, basses, and, most wonderful of all, from which his melodies are entirely evolved." S. himself called his new combinations 'mystic chords'; and as he drifted deeper and deeper into mysticism, music finally became for him merely a means for the expression of his theosophical ideas. A fancied relation between certain colors and certain tonal combinations grew into a fixed belief, so that the orchl. score of his Prometheus (op. 60) calls for a 'color-keyboard' (Farbenklavier, clavier de lumière, tastiera per luce), by means of which the colors corresponding to the chords, minutely indicated in the score, are to be actually projected on a screen. European conductors performed the work without the color scheme; but Modest Altschuler, cond. of the Russian Symph. Orch., had a color-keyboard built, and produced the work, exactly in accordance with the composer's directions, in New York on Mar. 20, 1915; the result was a complete fiasco. At the time of his death S. was engaged upon a 'Mystery' in which, besides colors, perfumes were to be introduced.—Works: For orch.: Op. 20, Pf.-concerto in F♯ m.; op. 24, Rêverie; op. 26, Symphony No. 1, in E (with final ch.); op. 29, do. No. 2, in C m.; op. 43, do. No. 3, in C, Le divin Poème; op. 54, Le Poème de l'Extase; op. 60, Prométhée, le Poème du Feu. For pf.; 10 sonatas (op. 6, F; op. 19, G♯ m. [Sonate-Fantaisie]; op. 23, F♯ m.; op. 30, F♯; op. 53, 62, 64, 66, 68, 70 [the last 6 in no key, but in his own system]. These sonatas alone are sufficient to give a complete history of the evolution of S's. style). All other opus-numbers are pf.-works: Op. 5, Deux Nocturnes; op. 9, Prélude et Nocturne (for left hand alone); op. 28, Fantaisie; op. 36, Poème satanique; 8 sets of Preludes (op. 11, 13, 15, 16, 17, 22, 27, 31); etc.—Cf. Liberal leave of absence enabled him to sing in Pest, Prague, Milan and several German cities, notably at the Wagner festivals at the Prinzregententh. in Munich. The greater part of the year 1908 he spent with Jean de Reszké in Paris, studying the French and Italian répertoire and perfecting his vocal method. In May, 1909, he made his London début with marked success as Otello; on Nov. 18, his Amer. début in the same rôle at the M. O. H., where he sang till 1912; sang also with the M. O. He has a pure tenor of unusual power and beautiful quality; of imposing stage-presence, his gigantic stature (he stands 6 ft., 3 in.) lends special impressiveness to his interpretation of heroic parts. Among his 60 rôles, Otello is, perhaps, the finest; his favorites are Otello, Raoul, Éléazar (La Juive) and Arnold (Tell).—Cf. L. Klinenberger, *L. S. Sme'tana, Bedřich [Friedrich], b. Leitomischl, Bohemia, Mar. 2, 1824; d. insane at Prague, May 12, 1884. Although the boy's talent manifested itself very early, his father's prejudice against music as a profession precluded systematic instruction; but young Bedřich taught himself the pf. and the rudiments of theory. When the father at last (1843) withdrew active opposition, he refused further financial support. A friend of his school-days, Katharina Kolař, who was studying the pf. with Proksch in Prague, then introduced S. to her master, who accepted him as a pupil (pf. and theory). Kittl, the director of the Cons., procured him a position as music-teacher in the family of Count Thun. After four years of earnest work S. gave up his position, and undertook his first concert-tour, which resulted in a disastrous financial failure. In despair, he turned to Liszt, who helped him to open a pf.-school of his own. This flourished, and a year later (1849) he married Katharina Kolař, who had also become a fine pianist. His reputation as a performer, especially as an interpreter of Chopin, grew rapidly, but his first compositions were received coldly. When, therefore, the Philh. Soc. of Göteborg offered him the conductorship in 1856, he immediately accepted. In his first year there he wrote his first three symphonic poems, Richard III, Wallensteins Lager and Hakon Jarl (after Öhlenschläger). As conductor and pianist he was highly appreciated. But the cold climate undermined his wife's health; For her sake he spent his vacations regularly in Prague; on the trip there in 1859, she died in Dresden. Meantime, important events were preparing at home. Skroup had made a beginning with national opera, whose chief national element was Bohemian texts, the music being practically devoid of national characteristics. The younger musicians and poets sought the establishment of a national art. After Austria had granted political freedom to Bohemia in Oct., 1860, an agitation was begun for the erection of a national opera-house in Prague. S. now resigned his post in Göteborg, and returned to Prague in May, 1861, assuming a leading rôle in the new movement. He conducted concerts and wrote articles in the 'Narodni Listy.' On Nov. 18, 1862, the new opera-house was opened; but the dozen Bohemian operas by Skroup, Skuhersky and Šebor could not furnish an important or varied répertoire; consequently, Meyerbeer and the Italians were sung in Bohemian. S. therefore turned to opera, and finished his first dramatic work, Braniboři v Čechách [The Brandenburgers in Bohemia], in 1863. It was not produced till Jan. 5, 1866; its success, while not overwhelming, was decided. On May 30 his second opera, Prodaná nevěsta [The Bartered Bride] was received with immense enthusiam. S. was appointed 1st cond. (replacing the Meyerbeer fanatic, Mayer), and acclaimed as Bohemia's greatest composer. This opera has also found success abroad (Austria and Germany 1892; Scandinavia, 1894; England, 1895; Italy, 1905; Belgium, 1907; U. S., 1909 [M. O. H., Feb. 19; in Ger.]). The next opera, Dalibor (May 16, 1868), on account of S.'s employment of leading-motives and more elaborate treatment of the orchestra, caused several critics to charge the composer with attempting to Wagnerize the national opera. A war of words, lasting ten years, resulted. In 1871, when there was talk of crowning Emperor Francis Josef as King of Bohemia, S. wrote Libussa for the coronation festivities. But no coronation took place, and S.'s enemies found means of preventing a production at the National Opera. Hoping to duplicate the success of his second work, he selected a comedy, Dvě vdovy [The Two Widows], prod. Mar. 28, 1874, with only moderate success. Continued opposition preyed upon his mind, producing a serious nervous disorder affecting his hearing. In the spring of 1874 he had to resign his conductorship; in October he was totally deaf. Mayer, his predecessor, succeeded him at the opera, and S. sought forgetfulness in work. He returned to the symphonic poem, but now found inspiration in national subjects. Thus originated those six masterpieces bearing the collective title Má Vlast [My Country]: Vyšehrad (the ancient castle of the Bohemian kings) and Vltava [The Moldau] in 1874; Šárka (a valley north of Prague, named after a mythological character) and Z českých luhův a hajův [From Bohemia's Meadows and Groves] in 1875; Tábor [The Camp] (introducing the Hussite war-song) in 1878; and Blaník

(the Bohemian 'Kyffhäuser') in 1879. To this period also belongs his best-known work, the famous E minor string-quartet Z mého Života [Aus meinem Leben] (1876). But S.'s labors on behalf of national art had already borne fruit; a reaction soon set in, and by the end of 1875 S.'s friends again controlled the opera. Early in 1876 the master began a new opera, Hubička [The Kiss], produced with gratifying success on Oct. 27, 1876. Tajemství [The Secret] (Sept. 18, 1878) was hailed as a second Bartered Bride, and won even the opposition party. For the opening (June 11, 1881) of the new National Opera Libussa was unanimously chosen, and created a profound impression. His last opera, Čertova stěna [The Devil's Wall] (Oct. 29, 1882), was a comparative failure. His health had not improved; nevertheless, he continued to create new works—a string-quartet in D m. (intended as a sequel to Aus meinem Leben), an orchl. suite, Prager Karneval, and an opera, Viola. But none were completed; early in 1884 he had to be transferred to the insane asylum.

S. is the father of Bohemian music. His operas are the first in which the music itself exhibits national characteristics. Prodaná nevěsta will ever remain a landmark in Bohemian musical history, for it showed the way along which the national art has actually developed since. Its influence upon contemporary composers (Blodek, Bendl, Hřimaly) was immediate. S. did not become known abroad until Dvořák had drawn the attention of the musical world to his land. In the symphonic poem S. is not a mere imitator of Liszt; he grasped the very spirit of the creator of the form, and made it the vehicle of a new and important message. Although Dvořák is more widely known, many eminent musicians in Bohemia assign the first place to S.—Besides the works mentioned above, S. wrote a Triumph-Symphonie (1853), a Festmarsch in honor of the Shakespeare tercentenary (1864), 2 other str.-quartets (F and C), a pf.-trio in G m., a Fantasie for vl. and orch., some part-songs and comps. for pf. (a set of Bohemian dances, 3 sets of polkas, the popular concert-étude Am Seegestade, etc.).—BIBLIOGRAPHY: B. Wellek, *F. S. Spohr, Ludwig [Louis], genial violinist and composer of the romantic school, and a renowned teacher; b. Brunswick, April 5, 1784; d. Kassel, Nov. 22, 1859. His father, a physician, removed to Seesen in 1786; he was an amateur flute-player, the mother a singer and pianist. S. early sang duets with his mother, and at about 5 began on the violin with Rector Riemenschneider. He also had lessons from Dufour, a French émigré, who persuaded his parents to send him to Brunswick, where he was taught by Kunisch, Hartung, and the leader of the orch., Maucourt; he also composed diligently, and at 14 played a concerto of his own before the court. The Duke admitted him into the orch., and in 1802 requested Franz Eck, then touring Germany, to take S. as a pupil. The latter accompanied Eck to Petrograd, remaining with him 18 months; practised assiduously, and publ. a violin-concerto (op. 1), etc. In 1803 he reëntered the Ducal orch.; in 1804 he made his first tour (to Berlin, Leipzig, Dresden, etc.), and aroused genuine enthusiasm both as a virtuoso and composer. At Gotha he was app. in 1805 to succeed Ernst as leader; here he met and married Dorette Scheidler, the harp-player, making further tours with her in 1807 and 1809. In the latter year he cond. the first musical festival in Germany, held at Frankenhausen. After brilliantly successful concerts at Vienna in 1812, he became leader at the Theater an der Wien. Resigning in 1815, he cond. a second Festival at Frankenhausen; made a grand tour in Italy (playing a concertante of his own with Paganini at Rome), then in Holland, and in 1817 became opera-cond. at Frankfort. This position he gave up in 1819; in 1820 he visited England with his wife, played in several Philharm. Concerts, and brought out two symphonies, conducting the Philharm. Orch. with a bâton—an entirely novel method in England. Concerts given at Paris, on the home-journey, found less appreciative audiences. S. now settled in Dresden; but in 1821 he was offered a life-appointment as court conductor at Kassel, and entered upon the duties of the position on Jan. 1, 1822. Here he won lasting renown as a conductor, and reached his zenith as a composer in the opera Jessonda (1823), the oratorio Die letzten Dinge (1826), and his grand symphony, Die Weihe der Töne (1832). Though his powers were on the wane, it was chiefly for political reasons (S. was a staunch radical) that he was retired in 1857 on a pension considerably less than had been expressly agreed upon. In the following year he broke his left arm by falling, and thenceforward could play no more in public.—S. was a composer of marked individuality, with a romantic warmth of temperament akin to Schubert, and in fine regard for formal finish resembling Mendelssohn. He ranks just below the greatest representatives of new German art; some of whom (e. g., Weber and Beethoven) he failed to appreciate; though, curiously enough, he did recognize Wagner's supreme dramatic genius, brought out Der fliegende Holländer [1843] and Tannhäuser [1853] despite strenuous opposition by the court, and tried hard to produce Lohengrin. As a virtuoso he was distinctly one of the greatest, more especially in the cantabile. His success as a teacher was conspicuous; St. Lubin, Ferd. David, Hauptmann, Kömpel, Bott, Böhm, Pott, Henry Blagrove, K. L. Bargheer and Adolph Bargheer (his last pupil) were trained by him. He was also one of the best conductors in Germany, and often officiated at the great Musical Festivals (at Düsseldorf, 1826; Nordhausen, 1829; Norwich, 1839; Bonn, 1845; etc.). His publ. compositions number 154. He wrote 11 operas: Die Prüfung (1806), Alruna (1808; MS. score in Boston Public Library), and Die Eulenkönigin (1808), all 3 not perf.; Der Zweikampf mit der Geliebten (Hamburg, 1811); Faust (Prague, 1816; rewritten 1852); Zemire und Azore (Frankfort, 1819; for a time rivalling Jessonda in popularity); then, in Kassel, Jessonda (1823); Der Berggeist (1825); Pietro von Abano (1828); Der Alchymist (1830); and Die Kreuzfahrer (1845);—the oratorios Das Jüngste Gericht (Erfurt, 1812); Die letzten Dinge (Kassel, 1826; in England as The Last Judgment); Des Heilands letzte Stunden (Kassel, 1835; as Calvary at the Norwich Fest., 1839); and Der Fall Babylons (Norwich Fest., 1842);—a dram. cantata, Das befreite Deutschland; a mass, psalms, hymns, etc., f. soli, ch. and orch.; also part-songs f. mixed or male ch.; duets; many songs. —Nine symphonies: 1. op. 20, E♭; 2. op. 49, D m.; 3. op. 78, C m.; 4. op. 86, F (Weihe der Töne); 5. op. 102, C m.; 6. op. 116, G (Historical; dedicated to the London Philharm. Soc.); 7. op. 121, C (Irdisches und Göttliches im Menschenleben, f. 2 orchs.); 8. op. 137, G m. (ded. to the London Philharm.); 9. op. 143, B m. (Die Jahreszeiten);—eight overtures, incl. those to Die Prüfung, Alruna, Das befreite Deutschland, to the play Der Matrose, and the fantasia on Raupach's Tochter der Luft (played as 1st movem. to Symphony No. 5), a Macbeth overture, and an overture Im ernsten Styl;—fifteen violin-concertos, classics of violin-literature, among the finest being No. 8 (op. 47 in A m.,'in modo d'una scena cantante'), and No. 9 (op. 55, in D m.), all edited by Ferd. David; a remarkable 'quartet-concerto' for 2 violins, viola and 'cello, w. orch., op. 131; 2 concertantes f. 2 violins w. orch.; Grande Polonaise f. violin w. orch.; 2 clar.-concertos;—much fine chamber-music, in which the leading violin is particularly favored (a nonet f. vln., vla., 'cello, d.-bass, wood-wind and horn; an octet f. vln., 2 violas, 'cello, d.-bass, clar. and 2 horns; 4 double quartets f. strings; septet f. pf., flute, clar., horn, bassoon, violin and cello'; string-sextet; 7 string-quintets; quintet f. pf., flute, clar., horn and bassoon; pf.-quintet; 34 string-quartets; 5 pf.-trios; 14 duos concertants f. 2 violins; 3 do. f. pf. and violin; 3 sonates concertantes f. harp and violin; etc., etc. Finally, his great Violinschule in 3 parts (1831).

Sponti'ni, Gasparo (Luigi Pacifico), very prominent Italian dramatic composer; b. Majolati, Ancona, Nov. 14, 1774; d. there Jan. 24, 1851. His parents, poor peasants, intended him for the church, and gave him in charge of an uncle, a priest at Jesi, who attemped to stifle his musical aspirations. The result was, that the boy ran away to another uncle, at San Vito, who not only procured him suitable instruction, but effected a reconcilation, so that in a year he returned to Jesi, was taught by good masters, and in 1791 entered the Cons. della Pietà de' Turchini at Naples, studying under Sala and Tritto. In 1796 he was invited to write an opera for the Teatro Argentina at Rome, its director having been pleased by some of S.'s music heard in Naples; though S., to this end, absented himself from the Cons. without leave, Piccinni, after the success of the opera, I puntigli delle donne, persuaded the management to take him back, and also gave him valuable advice concerning the composition of other operas written for Rome, Florence, and Naples. As cond. to the Neapolitan court, which had fled to Palermo before the French invasion, S. brought out 3 operas there in 1800; wrote others for Rome (1801) and Venice (1802), and then proceeded via Marseilles to Paris (1803). Up to this time he had prod. 16 operas in the prevalent light Italian style; while supporting himself in Paris by lesson-giving, the ill-success attending the production of 3 operas in 1804—La finta filosofa, an earlier work, and two imitations of French opéra comique, Julie and La petite maison (the latter was hissed off the stage)—and his fortunate acquaintance with the poet Étienne Jouy, influenced him to change his style completely. His great admiration for, and careful study of, Mozart also operated to effect this change. The 1-act opera Milton (Th. Feydeau, Nov. 27, 1804) differed markedly, in warmth and depth of sentiment and loftiness of expression, from its immediate predecessors; La Vestale, on which S. labored for more than three years, retouching and rewriting passage after passage, page after page, shows the new Spontini at his best. Meantime the Empress Josephine, to whom he had dedicated the score of Milton, had appointed him her 'chamber-composer,' and her favor increased after the production of S.'s cantata, L'eccelsa gara, celebrating the victory of Austerlitz. Her powerful patronage secured a hearing for La Vestale, which was brought out at the Académie Impériale (Grand Opéra), despite virulent open and secret opposition on the part of influential musicians, on Dec. 15, 1807, and with triumphant success. Not only did the public receive it with acclamation; by a unanimous verdict of the judges, Méhul, Gossec and Grétry, the prize offered by Napoleon for the best dramatic work was awarded to Spontini. Shortly after the equal success of his grand opera Fernand Cortez, in 1809 (revised 1817), S. married the daughter of Jean-Baptiste Érard, and in 1810 became director of the Italian Opera, in which capacity he staged Mozart's Don Giovanni in its original form for the first time in Paris. He was dismissed in 1812, on charges of financial irregularity; but in 1814 Louis XVIII appointed him court composer, S. having refused reinstatement as opera-director in favor of Catalani. He now wrote stage-pieces in glorification of the Restoration (Pélage, ou le roi et la paix, 1814; Les Dieux rivaux, 1816), followed in 1819 by the opera Olympie, which had only a succès d'estime. He had already accepted the appointment, by King Friedrich Wilhelm III., of court composer and general musical director at Berlin; he made his début there, in the Spring of 1820, with his opera Fernand Cortez, fairly electrifying his audiences, although, like Julie, Milton and La Vestale, it had been heard before in Berlin. Here S.'s wonderful talents as a conductor had freest scope; besides repeating his earlier works, he wrote for Berlin the festival play Lalla Rookh (1821), remodeled as the opera Nurmahal, oder das Rosenfest von Kaschmir (1822); Alcidor (1825); and Agnes von Hohenstauffen (1829; rewritten 1837); none of these, however, found currency in other German cities. In spite of his successes, and the King's continued favor, S.'s position in Berlin gradually grew untenable; he had been placed on an equality with the Intendant of the Royal Theatre, and there were frequent misunderstandings and sharp clashes of authority, not tempered by S.'s jealousies and dislikes, his overweening self-conceit and despotic temper. Partly through intrigue, partly by reason of his own lack of self-control, he narrowly escaped imprisonment for lèse-majesté; and was finally fairly driven out of the theatre by the hostile demonstrations of the audience. He retired in 1841, retaining his titles and full pay; the next year he went to Paris, a broken man, unfitted for composition or any regular occupation by the stinging memory of his degradation. He sought to improve his shattered health by returning to Italy; but died not long after reaching his native place. In 1844 the Pope had given him the rank and title of 'Conte de Sant' Andrea'; he was a knight of the Prussian 'Ordre pour le mérite,' member of the Berlin Akademie (1833), and the Paris Académie (1839), and had received from Halle Univ. the degree of Dr. phil. —Bibliography: L. de Loménie, *M. Sta'mitz, Johann Wenzel Anton, famous violinist and the creator of the modern style of instrl. music; b. Deutsch-Brod, Bohemia, June 19, 1717; d. Mannheim (buried Mar. 30), 1757. He probably received his entire musical education from his father, a cantor. His playing at the coronation of Emperor Charles VII at Frankfort (1742) created a sensation, and Prince Karl Theodor, who in 1743 became Elector Palatine, eng. S. as his chamber-musician, making him Konzertmeister (in 1745) of the electoral orch. in Mannheim and 'Kammermusikdirektor.' As a virtuoso and teacher he was one of the most famous of his time, among his distinguished pupils being his own sons Karl and Anton, C. Cannabich, W. Cramer, I. Fränzel, etc.; as conductor he made the Mannheim orch. the finest in Europe, unrivalled for its perfection of dynamic shading. But these achievements are overshadowed by the importance of his innovations as a composer; he practically established the classical sonata-form through introducing the element of contrast into a single movement (primary and secondary subject), replacing the stereotyped basso continuo by skilful and effective leading of the basses, and making variety and ingenuity leading factors in the thematic development. To the form itself Haydn and Mozart added practically nothing; they only filled it with the content of their greater genius. Among the composers that adopted S.'s new style are his own pupils, C. Cannabich, C. Toëschi, F. Beck, A. Filtz, as well as F. X. Richter, F. Schobert, Joh. Chr. Bach, Boccherini, Dittersdorf, Eichner, Gossec, etc. The great number of editions of these composers' works (printed in Paris, London and Amsterdam) affords testimony for the immense popularity of the innovation during the 18th century; the transcendent genius of the classic masters (Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven) caused the works of S. and his school to fall into undeserved oblivion in the following century, until H. Riemann (in the early years of the present cent.) rescued the scores from the dust of libraries. S. wrote 50 symphonies; 10 trios for orch.; about 12 vl.-concertos; a number of sonatas for vl. solo, and others for vl. with basso cont.—A selection from his symphonies was publ. by Riemann in 'Dkm. der Tonk. in Bayern' (iii, 1; vii, 2), chamber-music (ib.; xv and xvi), 9 orchl. trios in 'Collegium Musicum.'—Cf. H. Riemann's introduction to vols. iii and vii of 'Dkm. der Tonk. in Bayern.'

H. Riemann ed. 2 symphonies (E♭ and G) in vol. viii, 2 of 'Dkm. der Tonk. in Bayern'; chamber-music in vols. xv and xvi; 5 vl.-sonatas (op. 20) in Ed. Peters.—See Q.-Lex.

A choir-boy at San Marco, Venice, his beautiful soprano voice so charmed Count Tattenbach that he obtained permission to take the boy to Munich, where he was trained from 1667 by Kerl at the Elector's expense, becoming court and chamber-musician in 1670. After study in Rome under E. Bernabei (1672–4), he became court organist in 1675; took holy orders in 1680; prod. his first opera, Marco Aurelio, in 1681, about this time being made director of the Elector's chamber-music (with Bernabei). Other operas, Solone (1685), Audacia e rispetto (1685), Servio Tullio (1686), Alarico (1687), and Niobe (1688), followed; in 1688, a year after Bernabei's death, he went to Hanover as court Kapellm. Here he brought out the opera Enrico detto il Leone in 1689, the orchestration of which is noteworthy (besides the string-quartet, there are flutes, oboes, bassoons, 3 trumpets, and drums; all the wind-instrs. have obbligato passages); further, La lotta di Alcide (d'Ercole) con Acheloo [Acheloös] (1689), La superbia d'Alessandro (1691), Orlando generoso (1691), Le rivali concordi (1692), La libertà contenta [Alcibiade] (1693), I trionfi del fato (1695; at Hamburg, 1699, in German, as Das mächtige Geschick bei Lavinia und Dido); Briseïde (1696); Atalanta; Arminio (Düsseldorf, 1707); Tassilone (ibid., 1709), and Enea (Hanover, 1709). Long before this, however, his services had been more in requisition as a diplomatist than as a musician; in 1696 he had brought to a triumphant conclusion the delicate negotiations for the creation of a ninth Elector of Brunswick, being rewarded by the appointment of Bishop of Spiga ('in partibus'); from 1698 he was privy councillor and Papal Protonotary at Düsseldorf, though still holding his position as Kapellm. at Hanover till 1711, when he joyfully relinquished it to Handel. Stei'belt [stī'bĕlt], Daniel, noted piano-virtuoso; b. Berlin, 1765; d. Petrograd, Sept. 20, 1823. A pupil of Kirnberger for theory and pf.-playing, he came out early; publ. sonatas for pf. and violin as op. 1 and 2 at Munich, 1788; and in 1789 was giving concerts in Saxony, Hanover and Mannheim, proceeding to Paris in 1790. After vanquishing Johann David Hermann and Ignaz Pleyel, he became the reigning pianist and favorite teacher in Paris; his compositions found ready sale; and the triumph of his first opera, Roméo et Juliette (Th. Feydeau, 1793), would have rendered his position impregnable, despite his arrogance and bad manners, had he not sold to his publisher, Boyer, the above-named sonatas as something new. This was temporarily smoothed over; but further questionable transactions, and increasing debts, obliged S. to leave Paris in 1797. He stayed some time in London, winning plaudits as player and composer; the finale of his 3d concerto, l'Orage, précédé d'un rondeau pastoral, became as fashionably popular as Koczwara's Battle of Prague, for half a century the show-piece of drawing-rooms. In 1799 he began a German tour in Hamburg, going thence to Dresden, Prague, Berlin and Vienna, where his challenge to Beethoven ended in sad discomfiture. In 1800 he brought out Haydn's Creation at Paris, for the first time, with great success, he himself acting as cembalist; but soon had to take flight, and settled in London until 1805, when he revisited Paris for the last time, remained there 3 years, and in 1808 suddenly started on a concert-tour, playing in Frankfort, Leipzig, Breslau and Warsaw, and settling in Petrograd, where he succeeded Boieldieu, in 1818, as cond. of the French Opera and Imp. court cond.; here he prod. 2 new operas, and some earlier ones. —S.'s music is not played nowadays, and the greater part probably merits oblivion; but Fétis bestows warm praise on the sonatas and concertos (works of his first period, before pressing need had forced him to write hastily and carelessly). He publ. 5 pf.-concertos, 37 sonatas w. violin, 29 solo sonatas and sonatinas, 15 rondos, 18 fantasias, etc.; among the best are 50 Études, op. 78; a sonata in E♭, op. 45; a rondo in B♭, Le Berger et son troupeau; the Élégie on the death of Prince Soltÿkov, and a duo for 2 pfs. Pieces which created a sensation in their day are Combat naval, op. 41, the Sonate martiale, op. 82, the Bataille de Gemappe et de Neerwinde, Die Zerstörung von Moskwa, and the Storm rondo mentioned above—all trashy 'program-music.' His Méthode de Piano had considerable vogue. His masterpiece is probably the opera Roméo et Juliette; besides which he prod. 5 other operas, and 5 ballets. German criticism of S. is unanimously unfavorable.—See Q.-Lex.

Every year in June 3 or 4 concerts are given, under eminent conductors with the assistance of famous soloists and an orchestra selected from the best players of Boston and New York, all expenses being met by Mr. S.; tickets are not sold, but sent to guests invited by the committee. What has contributed especially to the fame of these festivals is the production, annually, of 2 important new works (choral or orchestral), generally by American composers, for which Mr. S. has establ. substantial cash prizes. Among the composers so far (1917) represented are J. A. Carpenter, G. W. Chadwick, S. Coleridge-Taylor, H. F. Gilbert, P. Grainger, H. K. Hadley, E. S. Kelley, H. Parker, J. Sibelius, C. V. Stradel'la, Alessandro, famous Italian composer of the 17th century. His career is shrouded in mystery, not even place or date of his birth or death being known. It is supposed that he was born in Naples or Venice about 1645, and died in Genoa after July 6, 1681 (the date borne by his cantata Il Barcheggio). The only positively established fact is, that in 1677 an attempt was made on his life during an operatic performance in Turin (cf. A. Einstein in 'Das Bayerland,' 1910, p. 173). He is the hero of Flotow's opera, which is founded on a story narrated by Bonnet-Bourdelot in Histoire de la musique et de ses effets (Paris, 1715).—Extant works: Oratorios San Giovanni Battista, a 5 w. instrs. (publ. 1676), and Susanna (1681); the operas Corispero (1665?), Orazio Cocle sul ponte (1666?), Trespulo tutore (1667), La forza del amore paterno (1678); the cantata Il Barcheggio (1681);—148 MSS. in the Modena Library, incl. 8 oratorios and 11 dramas; cantatas in the Naples Cons. Library; 21 cantatas in the library of San Marco, Venice (10 publ. by L. Escudier, w. pf.-accomp. by Halévy);—others in the Paris Nat. Library, and at the Cons.;—1 motet and 8 cantatas at Christchurch Library, Oxford; a number of cantatas, madrigals, arias, duets, etc., in the British Museum; etc.—The church-aria Pietà, Signore, and the arias O del mio dolce ardor and Se i miei sospiri, have been wrongly attributed to S.—Cf. Stradiva'ri [Stradiva'rius], Antonio, b. Cremona, 1644; d. there Dec. 18, 1737; divides with Guarneri the honor of being the most skilful of violin-makers. It is probable that he worked for Niccolò Amati from about 1667–79. He purchased the house in which, for half a century, his workshop was situated, in 1680. His finest instruments were made in the period from 1700–1725; but he still worked up to 1736. Grove says of him: "S. marks the culminating point of the art of making stringed instruments. It was he who perfected the model of the violin and its fittings. No improvement has been made since his time, and subsequent makers . . . have mostly copied him." His label reads: 'Antonius Stradivarius Cremonensis. Fecit Anno . . . (A † S).' His violoncelli command even higher prices than the violins. Of his eleven children, two sons, Francesco (born Feb. 1, 1671; d. May 11, 1743) and Omobono (b. Nov. 14, 1679; d. July 8, 1742), were his co-workers. S. also made violas (equally prized with the violins), viols of the earlier types, guitars, lutes, mandolins, etc.—Cf. P. Lombardini, Cenni sulla celebre scuola Cremonense degli instrumenti ad arco . . . e sulla famiglia del sommo Antonio Stradivari (Cremona, 1872; with genealogical table from the 13th century to date of publication); H. Petheric, A. S. (London, 1900); H. W., A. F., F. S. and A. E. Hill, A. S. His Life and Work (London, 1902; the standard work); A. Mandelli, Nuove indagini su A. S. (Milan, 1903).—An exhaustive article, with full bibliography, is in Grove's Dictionary.

N. Y., 1892) carried on the management of concert- and opera-troupes.

Stransky, Josef, distinguished orchestral conductor; b. Humpoletz, n. Deutschbrod, Bohemia, Sept. 9, 1872. Having completed the course at the German Gymnasium at Prague, he began the study of medicine at the Univ. there; also founded and cond. a students' orch.; while continuing his medical studies at the Univ. of Leipzig, he was a pupil in theory of Jadassohn; st. comp. with R. Fuchs, Bruckner and Dvořák in Vienna, and, before definitively adopting music as a profession, passed the state examinations in Prague (M.D., 1896). In 1898 he was eng. by A. Neumann as 1st Kapellm. at the Landesth. in Prague (very successful début with Die Walküre); in 1903 he went in a similar capacity to the Stadtth. in Hamburg; frequent leave of absence enabled him to fill many engagements as visiting conductor in Germany, Austria, Holland and England; in 1909 he gave a series of symphony concerts with the Blüthner Orch. in Berlin, and during the summer cond. Gura's season of opera (10 weeks). In 1910 he resigned from the Hamburg opera to devote himself to concert-work; from 1910–11 he cond. the 'Verein der Musikfreunde' in Dresden, and in the autumn of 1911 became Mahler's succ. as cond. of the Philh. Soc. in New York. A bequest of one million dollars to the society (by Joseph Pulitzer, 1912) enabled S. to carry out successfully the sweeping reforms instituted by his illustrious predecessor (chief of which was a system of daily rehearsals during the season of 23 weeks); under his leadership the organization has become an aggregation of virtuosi rivalling the finest orchestras in the world. Among his publ. works are an opera, Beatrice und Benedikt, and Symphonische Lieder; an operetta, Der General, was prod. at Hamburg; in MS. he has symphonies, chamber-music and songs.

Lucas (comp.); 1862–4, teacher of music at Totteridge Park School and org. at St. James's, Herts; settled in 1866 in Birmingham, where he held various posts as org., the last being at the Ch. of the Saviour (1878–82); for several years mus. critic of the Birmingham 'Daily Post' and contrib. to the London 'Monthly Musical Record' and 'Musical Times.' He was one of the original members of the College of Organists (1864; resigned 1894); assoc. member of the Philh. Soc. (1882). He is the author (with J. D. Brown) of a valuable work, British Musical Biography (1897); also publ. Mendelssohn (1901; in the series 'Master Musicians') and Niccolo Paganini. His Life and Work (1907). (1907) and official org. at the Gewandhaus (1908); made 'Kgl. Prof.' in 1908. He cond. the great Bach festivals at Leipzig in 1904, '08, '11 and '14. His first recitals in 1894 attracted unusual attention; since then he has been heard in the principal cities of Germany. He was the first to introduce the organ-works of Max Reger, of which he is still the unrivalled interpreter. Has publ. 'Alte Orgelmeister' (1904), '45 Choralvorspiele alter Meister' (1907), Bach's Magnificat (1909), Handel's Dettingen Te Deum (1913); his new editions of the organ-works of Bach and Liszt are now (1917) in course of publication.—Cf. Straus, Oskar, b. Vienna, April 6, 1870. Private pupil of A. Prosnitz and H. Grädener in Vienna and of M. Bruch in Berlin. From 1895–1900 he was cond. at various theatres (Brünn, Teplitz, Mayence, etc.); in 1901, cond. for E. von Wolzogen's 'Überbrettl' in Berlin, for which he wrote a number of farces; since 1904 he has prod. a number of operettas and comic operas, several of which possess more than ordinary merit and have won remarkable success.—Stage-works (prod. in Vienna, unless mentioned otherwise): Der schwarze Mann (Colberg, 1900); Die lustigen Nibelungen (1904); Colombine (Berlin, 1904); Zur indischen Witwe (Berlin, 1905); Hugdietrichs Brautfahrt (1906); Ein Walzertraum (1907); Der tapfere Soldat (1908; in N. Strauss, Eduard, brother of Johann S., Jr.; b. Vienna, Feb. 14, 1835; d. there Dec. 29, 1916. Pupil of G. Preyer in comp.; succ. début with his own orch. at the 'Dianasaal' in 1862; acted as Johann's substitute during the latter's tour of Russia (1865); succeeded him in 1870 as cond. of the court balls. For many years he gave concerts in the 'Volksgarten' (summer) and in the hall of the 'Musikverein' (winter); also made extended tours, visiting the U. S. in 1892 and 1901–2. He then dissolved his orch., which (founded by his father in 1826), after three-quarters of a century of uninterrupted success, had become almost an historical institution. His publ. dances comprise 318 opus-numbers, but could not rival his brother's in popularity. In 1906 he publ. Erinnerungen.

Strauss, Franz, famous horn-virtuoso; b. Parkstein, Upper Palatinate, Feb. 26, 1822; d. Munich, June 2, 1905. Until his retirement in 1889 he was solo hornist at the Hofoper in Munich; although a violent opponent of Wagner, the master valued him highly, and entrusted to him at the premières of Tristan, Meistersinger and Parsifal the important solo passages; until 1896 he was prof. of his instr. at the Kgl. Akademie der Tonkunst, and from 1875–96 cond. an excellent amateur orch., the 'Wilde Gungl,' in Munich. He wrote a horn-concerto in C m. (op. 8); Nocturne (op. 7) and Empfindungen am Meere (op. 12) for horn and pf.; 17 Konzertetüden and Übungen für Naturhorn (2 books).

Strauss, Johann (Sr.), 'The Father of the Waltz'; b. Vienna, Mar. 14, 1804; d. there Sept. 25, 1849. His father, who kept a beer-house and dance-hall, apprenticed him to a bookbinder; after S. had run away his parents consented to his becoming a musician. He st. the violin under Polyschansky, and harmony under Seyfried; at 15 joined Pamer's orch. in the 'Sperl' dance-hall, and the Lanner Quartet in 1823, later acting as deputy conductor of Lanner's orch.; organized an independent orch. of 14 in 1826, playing at various resorts, and producing his first waltzes (op. 1 is the Täuberl-Walzer, for the garden-concerts at the 'Zwei Tauben'). His renown spread, and his orch. increased rapidly in size and efficiency; from 1833 he undertook concert-tours in Austria, and in 1834 was app. bandmaster of the 1st Vienna militia regiment. His tours extended to Berlin in 1834, and to Holland and Belgium in 1836; in 1837–8 he invaded Paris with a picked corps of 28, and had immense success both here and in London. In 1845 he was made cond. of the court balls at Vienna. Among 152 published waltzes, the Lorelei-, Gabrielen-, Taglioni-, Cäcilien-, Victoria-, Kettenbrücken-, and Bajaderen-Walzer, the Elektrische Funken, Mephistos Höllenrufe, and the Donau-Lieder, are prime favorites; he also wrote 24 galops, 13 polkas, 32 quadrilles, 6 cotillons and contredanses, 18 marches, and 6 potpourris. Both as a comp. and cond. he distinctly raised the level of dance-music. His complete works (251 op.-numbers), edited by his son Johann, were publ. by Breitkopf & Härtel in 1899: Vols. i–v, Waltzes; vol. vi, Polkas, Galops, Marches; vol. vii, Quadrilles.—Cf. L. Scheyrer, J. S.'s musikalische Wanderung durch das Leben (Vienna, 1851); R. Kleinecke, J. S. (Leipzig, 1894); F. Lange, Josef Lanner und J. S. (Vienna, 1904).

Strauss, Johann (Jr.), 'The Waltz-King'; b. Vienna, Oct. 25, 1825; d. there June 3, 1899. His father, though a tender parent, could not bear the idea of professional rivalry within the family, and intended all 3 of his sons for business; but the mother privately procured instruction on the violin and in comp. (Drechsler) for Johann, who threw off paternal control in 1844, appearing on Oct. 15 as cond. of the orch. at Dommayer's restaurant at Hietzing. His success was instantaneous, and his new waltzes won wide popularity. In 1849, after his father's death, he united the two orchestras; made a tour through Austria, Poland, and Germany; and in 1855 was eng. for ten years to conduct the summer concerts at the Petropaulovski Park in Petrograd. In 1862 he married the singer Henriette Treffz; from 1863–70 he was cond. of the court balls, resigning in favor of his brother Eduard to obtain more leisure for composition; now turning from dance-music, a domain in which he had won supreme artistic and popular success, to operetta, herein rivalling Lecocq and Suppé. In 1872 he accepted an invitation to visit the U. S., directing 14 monster-concerts in Boston and 4 in New York. He wrote almost 500 pieces of dance-music (498 op.-numbers); of the waltzes The Beautiful Blue Danube, Roses from the South, Künstlerleben, Wiener Blut, The 1001 Nights, Wine, Woman and Song, and Geschichten aus dem Wiener Wald may be mentioned. "One of S.'s waltzes," said Wagner, "as far surpasses in charm, finish and real musical worth hundreds of the artificial compositions of his contemporaries, as the tower of St. Stephen's surpasses the advertising columns on the Paris Boulevards." On Mme. S.'s fan Brahms wrote the opening measures of the Blue Danube Waltz, and underneath: 'Leider nicht von Brahms' [Alas, not by B.].—Operettas: Indigo [Die 40 Räuber] ('71; rev. and adapted to a new text by E. Reiterer as 1001 Nacht, 1906); Der Carneval in Rom ('73); Die Fledermaus ('74; in Paris 1877 as La Tzigane [with entirely new and different texts; even the music only partly from the orig. score, numbers from Cagliostro, and others not by S., being interpolated; genuine version as La Chauvesouris given at Th. des Variétés, April 22, 1904]); Cagliostro ('75); Prinz Methusalem ('77); Blindekuh ('78); Das Spitzentuch der Königin ('80); Der lustige Krieg ('81); Eine Nacht in Venedig ('83); Der Zigeunerbaron ('85); Simplicius (Vienna, 1887, unsucc.; remodelled and prod. at Prague, '88, with considerable applause); 3-act comic opera Ritter Pásmán ('92; mod. succ.); Fürstin Ninetta ('93; v. succ.); 3-act operetta Jabuka, oder das Apfelfest ('94; succ.); 3-act do. Waldmeister ('95; v. succ.); Die Göttin der Vernunft (97; succ.); a ballet, Aschenbrödel (left practically complete; finished by Bayer); and 'Fantasiestücke' for orch., Traumbilder. —Cf. L. Eisenberg, J. S., ein Lebensbild (Leipzig, 1894); R. von Procházka, J. S. (Berlin, 1900); R. Specht, J. S. (Berlin, 1909); F. Lange, J. S. (Leipzig, 1912).

Strauss, Joseph, born Brünn, 1793; d. Karlsruhe, Dec. 2, 1866. Violinist; pupil of his father, Blumenthal, Urbani, and Schuppanzigh, at Vienna, also of Albrechtsberger. Played in the court opera-orch., Vienna; was eng. in 1810 as solo violin at the Pest Th., 1813 as Kapellm. at Temesvar, 1814 to conduct the German opera at Hermannstadt. In 1817 Kapellm. at Brünn; in 1822, of German opera at Strassburg; in 1823, mus. dir. at the Mannheim court theatre; and 1824–63, court cond. at Karlsruhe.—7 operas: Armiodan (1836), Berthold der Zähringer (1838), Der Währwolf (1840), Die Schlittenfahrt nach Novgorod (1846), etc.; incid. music to dramas; the oratorio Judith; sacred and orchl. music; publ. a str.-quartet, vars. f. violin, and songs.

Strauss, Joseph, brother of Johann S., Jr.; b. Vienna, Aug. 25, 1827; d. there July 22, 1870. He made his début as cond. with Johann's orch. in 1853 during the latter's illness, and later formed an orch. of his own. Always of delicate health, injuries received at the hands of some Russian officers in Warsaw, who maltreated him when he refused to play for them in the middle of the night, resulted in his death shortly after his return to Vienna. He also was a prolific comp. of dances (283 opus-numbers). E. Reiterer and F. Sommer prod. in Vienna a number of operettas, in which they adapted appropriate dances by S. to a given libretto: Frühlingsluft (1903), Das Frauenherz (1905), Schwalberl aus dem Wienerwald (1906), Das Teufelsmädel (1908).—Cf. Eduard Strauss, Erinnerungen (Vienna, 1906).

Strauss, Richard, son of Franz S.; born Munich, June 11, 1864. At the age of 4 he received regular instruction from A. Tombo, the harpist of the court orch.; in his eighth year he began to study the violin with B. Walter, the leader of the court orch.; from 1875–80 he st. comp. and instrumentation with Hofkapellm. F. W. Meyer. His first attempt at comp. (a Polka in C) dates from the year 1870, and thenceforward he continued to write pf.-pcs., songs, sonatas and overtures for orch. before the publication of his op. 1 in 1881. Under his father's influence he turned his attention exclusively to the works of the classic masters. From 1874–82 he completed the course at the Gymnasium, and during the winter of 1882–3 attended lectures on philosophy and esthetics at the Univ. His public career as a composer may be said to have begun in 1880, when a chorus from Sophocles's Electra and a Festgesang were prod. at a concert of the Gymnasium; in 1881 H. Levi prod. his Symphony in D m. (op. 4); in 1882 Wüllner cond. the Serenade for wind-instrs. (op. 7); in 1883 Levi brought out a concert-overture in C m., and his former teacher Walter played the vln.-concerto (op. 8). These works, written in the forms and style of the classic masters and revealing an astonishing degree of technical mastery, won almost immediate recognition; before the young composer had reached his twenty-first birthday he could boast the honor of an American première, for on Dec. 13, 1884, Th. Thomas, then cond. of the Philh. Soc. of New York, gave the first perf. of the Symphony in F m. (op. 12). The winter of 1883–4 S. spent in Berlin, where Bülow became interested in him. On Oct. 1, 1885, he was engaged as Bülow's asst.-cond. in Meiningen, succeeding him next month as Hofkapellm. Although he held this position only till April 1, 1886, these few months in Meiningen proved to be a turning-point in his career as composer, for in that short time Alexander Ritter (q. v.) revealed to him the meaning and full significance of the works of Wagner and Liszt. This new knowledge before long caused him to abandon the ideals of the classicists and espouse those of the new school of program-music. After a journey to Italy in the spring of 1886 he entered on Aug. 1 upon the duties of 3d Kapellm. at the Hofoper in Munich. During the 3 years of his incumbency he conducted only minor operas (Levi and Fischer dividing the Wagner dramas between them), and had ample time for composition, writing the symphonic fantasy Aus Italien, and his first symphonic poems (Don Juan and Tod und Verklärung), also sketching Macbeth. Of these works he brought out only the fantasy (1887). Dissatisfied with the conservative attitude of the Munich public, he went to Weimar on Oct. 1, 1889, as 1st Kapellm. There he remained till June, 1894, laying the foundations of his fame as a composer by the production of Don Juan (Nov. 11, 1889), Tod und Verklärung (Eisenach fest., June 21, 1890) and Macbeth (Oct. 13, 1890). During 1892–3 he spent the winter and spring in Greece, Egypt and Sicily, writing the text and a part of the music of his first music-drama, Guntram. It was completed in Sept., 1893, and produced, with moderate success, in Weimar on May 12, 1894. During that summer he accepted Frau Wagner's invitation to conduct Tannhäuser at Bayreuth. He was recalled to Munich on Oct. 1, 1894, as Hofkapellm. (coördinate with Levi). In 1894–5 he cond. the Berlin Philh. concerts, succeeding Bülow; in 1896 he cond. his own works in Brussels, Liège and Moscow, besides a number of large German cities; in 1897 he visited Amsterdam, Paris, London and Barcelona; in 1902 he made with the Berlin Tonkünstler-orchester a tour of Germany, Austria, Switzerland, France and Italy. For his first visit to America (Feb.-April, 1904) he reserved a new work, the Sinfonia Domestica, which had its initial performance, under his own direction, in New York on Mar. 21. Until the outbreak of the war he continued his tours of European countries. Since Nov. 1, 1898, he has been 1st Hofkapellm. at the R. Opera in Berlin; was made Generalmusikdirektor in 1908, and elected member of the Akad. der Künste in 1910; Dr. phil. (hon. c.), Univ. of Heidelberg, 1902; Chev. of the Legion of Honor and recipient of numerous German and foreign decorations. From 1901–9 he was pres. of the 'Allgemeiner Deutscher Musikverein.' On Sept. 10, 1894, he married Pauline de Ahna, who created the rôle of Freihild in his Guntram; she is an excellent interpreter of his songs.

Among living composers S. is unquestionably the dominating figure, although opinions differ as to the value of his work. For 20 years the performance of a new work by him has been regarded as an event. His compositions so far (1917) may conveniently be divided into three groups or periods. The works of the first period (op. 1–19 [1880–7]) belong mostly to the kind known generally as 'absolute music,' and show the influence of classic and romantic models. In his second period (op. 20–9 [1887–95]) S. appears as a composer of striking individuality, the legitimate successor of Liszt, whose ideal of the symphonic poem he realized in Don Juan, Macbeth, Tod und Verklärung and Till Eulenspiegel. (See Liszt, p. 542.) This elastic form afforded S. full opportunity for the display of his brilliant qualities: emotional intensity, soaring melodic invention, a marvellous sense of orchestral color, extraordinary power of characterization and supreme command of technical resources. Certain bold innovations in harmony and orchestration created considerable discussion at the time; to-day they are accepted as a matter of course. Dating from Also sprach Zarathustra (written in 1895) there is noticeable a steady decline of the composer's creative power; Don Quixote (1898) and Ein Heldenleben (1899) each contains more startling and bizarre portions than its predecessor. There still are passages of transcendent beauty, but these passages become rarer and are separated by increasingly long stretches of commonplace, even trivial, music; throughout, a conscious striving for sensational effect becomes all too patent. After the comparative failure of the Sinfonia Domestica (1904), with its appalling poverty of thematic invention, S. turned to dramatic music. His operas Guntram (1894) and Feuersnot (1901) had attracted less attention than might have been expected; but the first performance of Salome (1905) aroused the musical world more than any other event since the première of Parsifal. In Berlin and London the work was not given until certain objectionable features had been eliminated, and after the American première at the M. O. H. the board of directors forbade its repetition. The opposition of musicians was directed less against the revolting drama than against the cacophanous music and brutal instrumentation. The angry discussions had not yet subsided, when S. startled the world with Elektra (1909), in which he reaches the lowest level of decadence. Whether the composer's choice of a comic subject for his next opera was prompted by the mere desire for another sensation or by the realization of how far he had strayed beyond the furthest limits of art, remains a matter for conjecture. Certain it is, that in Der Rosenkavalier (1911) he returns to recognized standards; of all his dramatic works it is the only one that has met with real success. Ariadne auf Naxos (1912) proved a disappointment in spite of some very fine music; even a revised version (1916) had only a 'succès d'estime.' With his Josefs-Legende (1914) he tried the field of the ballet without marked success. Neither does his Alpensymphonie (1915) reach the high plane of the masterpieces of his second period. The première of a new opera, Die Frau ohne Schatten (completed 1916), was announced by the Dresden court opera for the season of 1916–17; the performance has not yet taken place (Apr., 1918).—Throughout his career S. has cultivated the song, and the lyrics of the different periods faithfully reflect the general characteristics of the larger works. Thus the earlier songs (up to about op. 32) have become universal favorites with public and singers, while the later ones are practically neglected. Such gems as Zueignung, Die Nacht and Allerseelen (from op. 10), Ständchen and Barcarole (from op. 17), Breit über mein Haupt (from op. 19), Cäcilie, Heimliche Aufforderung and Morgen (from op. 27), Traum durch die Dämmerung (from op. 29) and Ich trage meine Minne (from op. 32) rank with the fine songs of the great masters as regards the excellence of the texts, perfect declamation, depth of feeling and melodic charm. Much has been written about S.'s marvellous skill of orchestration, and his panegyrists regard him as the greatest master of that art, as one who has advanced even beyond Wagner. It may be admitted that in the fine works of his second period, S. actually has possessed himself of the secret of Wagner's art of scoring. But it cannot be denied that through his subsequent enlargement of the orchestral apparatus by the introduction of new instruments (oboe d'amore, celesta, heckelphone), inartistic multiplication of the instruments of percussion and the addition of puerile wind- and thunder-machines the orchestration is overloaded. By keeping all instruments almost constantly employed and heaping one startling effect upon another S. deprives himself of all opportunity for contrast or effective climax. The general effect produced is that of unrest and lack of continuity.—While it is too early to attempt to determine S.'s place in the history of music, it is quite safe to assert that his great symphonic poems of the second period not only represent the highest achievement so far in the field of program-music, but have also settled definitely, and in the affirmative, the so long-agitated question whether the instrumental forms of 'program-music' were entitled to equal rank with the older forms of 'absolute music.'

Stravinsky, Igor Fedorovitch, b. Oranienbaum, near Petrograd, June 17, 1882. Although he was a remarkable pianist at the age of 10, his father destined him for the legal career. Meeting Rimsky-Korsakov in 1902, he decided to abandon law for music, and for the next four years he st. comp. and instrumentation with that master. As a composer he first attracted attention in 1908, when Ziloti prod. his Scherzo fantastique (op. 3), which disclosed decided futuristic sympathies and appealed to the director of the Ballet Russe, Sergei Diagilev, who commissioned him to write the music to a ballet, l'Oiseau de Feu. Other ballets and an opera (all prod. in Paris) followed in rapid succession and S. was proclaimed a genius and prophet by the admirers of futurism, for in each work he had 'advanced.' Unlike Schönberg or Skriabin, whose earliest music still rests on the foundations laid by the masters, S. at once begins in a style which is a direct negation of all acknowledged principles or standards. His combinations of tones defy analysis, for haphazard combinations of dissonant intervals do not constitute a chord, as that term is understood in music. The complete absence of even the most meagre thematic development may surprise only those who do not know that the first law of futurism forbids all 'repetition.' Even so thorough an impressionist as E. B. Hill speaks of S.'s "violently revolutionary style which is difficult to reduce to a system."—Works: The ballets l'Oiseau de Feu (Paris, 1910), Petrushka (ib., 1911), Le Sacre du Printemps (ib., 1913), Les Abeilles (ib., 1917), Les Noces villageoises (not yet prod.); an opera, Le Rossignol (Paris, 1914); op. 1, Symphony in E♭; op. 2, Le Faune et la Bergère for voice w. orch.; op. 3, Scherzo fantastique for orch.; op. 4, Feu d'artifice [Fireworks] for orch.; op. 5, Chant funèbre (in memory of Rimsky-Korsakov; MS.); op. 6, 4 studies for pf.; op. 7, 2 songs. Without opus-number: Les Rois des Étoiles for ch. and orch.; 3 songs (on Japanese poems) w. orch.; several songs w. pf.; a pf.-sonata (not publ.); 3 pcs. for str.-quartet.—Cf. C. van Vechten, *I. Her brilliant career was suddenly ended in 1849, when she married Verdi and retired from the stage. For unknown reasons this marriage (performed by Verdi's friend, the bishop of Angers, at Collanza, Savoy) was not publicly acknowledged until 1859.

Swee'linck [svā'link], Jan Pieters, born Amsterdam, 1562; d. there Oct. 16, 1621. This great organist, composer and teacher was the pupil of Jacob Buyck, pastor of the Old Church at Amsterdam, and probably of his father, Pieter S., the organist at that church, who died in 1573, the son succeeding to the position between 1577–81. As a player and teacher he was celebrated far and wide; most of the leading organists in Northern Germany, of the next generation, were his pupils. During his lifetime, only some of his vocal music was publ.; but his organ-music is more remarkable and important: S. was the first to employ the pedal in a real fugal part, and originated the organ-fugue built up on one theme with the gradual addition of counter-themes leading up to a highly involved and ingenious finale—a form perfected by Bach. In rhythmic and melodic freedom, his vocal compositions show an advance over the earlier polyphonic style, though replete with intricate contrapuntal devices. A complete ed. of S.'s works, in 12 vols., edited by Dr. Max Seiffert for the 'Vereeniging voor Noord-Nederlands Muziekgeschiedenis,' was publ. by Breitkopf & Härtel (1895–1903): Vol. i, Works for Organ and Clavichord; vol. ii, 1st half of the First Book of Psalms (1604); vol. iii, 2d half of do.; vol. iv, 1st half of the Second Book of Psalms (1613); vol. v, 2d half of do.; vol. vi, Third Book of Psalms (1614); vol. vii, Fourth Bk. do. (1621); vol. viii, Cantiones sacrae a 5; vol. ix, Chansons a 5; vol. x, Rimes françoises et italiennes a 2–4; vol. xi, Processional comps.; vol. xii, Rules for composition, ed. by H. Gehrmann. Vols. ii-vii comprise the 150 Psalms of David in the rhymed French version by Marot and Beza. —Cf. F. H. J. Tiedeman: J. P. S., een biobibliografische Schets (Amsterdam, 1876; 2d ed. 1892); M. Seiffert, J. P. S. und seine direkten Schüler, in 'Vschr. f. M.-W.' (1891).

They played this work for the first time in Berlin, April 24, 1915, under the composer's personal direction, at a private concert at the Philharmonie; the first public performance (according to Bruch's wish) was given by the Phila. Up to 1797 he wrote operas for Italy and London; then went to Paris, and prod. several French comic operas, one of which, d'Auberge en auberge, had much success at the Th. Feydeau in 1800 (publ. at Hamburg as Von Gasthof zu Gasthof, and at Vienna as Die zwei Posten).

Taren'ghi, Mario, born Bergamo, 1870. Pupil of the Cons. there and in Milan; now (1918) dir. of the Scuola Musicale di Milano. —Works: The operas Marcella (Bergamo, 1901), Gara antica (Biella, 1907), La Notte di Quarto (Genoa, 1910); Scena Orientale for orch.; a suite for fl. and pf.; fine pf.-pcs. (for 2 and 4 hands).

Tari'sio, Luigi, b. ?; d. Milan, Oct., 1854. He began life as a carpenter, and in his spare hours acquired sufficient skill on the violin to play dance-music at country-fairs, etc. His trade brought him into many humble homes, where he found old violins, the value of which was not suspected by their owners. Gifted with extraordinary powers of observation, he soon recognized the value of those neglected instruments, and, whenever possible, acquired them. After some time he began to imitate the models thus collected; then, in the capacity of repairer, he obtained access to Italian chapels and monasteries, where he discovered many valuable instruments. In 1827 he paid his first visit to Paris, disposing of a number of Italian violins to celebrated dealers. Soon he was acknowledged as the foremost connoisseur, so that his regular visits to Paris were eagerly looked for. In 1851 he made his first trip to London. T. was the first to recognize the value of the now famous Italian violins; it was he who created a market for them. He left a fortune of 300,000 francs, besides a collection of over 200 violins, which was acquired by Vuillaume of Paris.—Cf. G. Hart, The Violin: Famous Makers and Their Imitators (London, 1875; 4th ed. 1887); H. R. Haweis, Old Violins (ib., 1898); Hill, A. E. et al., Antonio Stradivari (ib., 1909).

Tarti'ni, Giuseppe, celebrated violinist; b. Pirano, Istria, April 8 [not 12], 1692; d. Padua, Feb. 16, 1770. While studying, at his parents' desire, for the priesthood, his first lessons on the violin strengthened his ardent longings for a secular career; his father finally allowed him to study law at Padua (1710), but music, especially the violin, and fencing, were his passion. A charge of abduction, following on his secret marriage to a niece of Cardinal Cornaro's, obliged him to take refuge in the Franciscan monastery at Assisi; for two years he studied the violin, also composition (under the organist Padre Boemo [Czernohorsky]), and then returned to Padua, a reconciliation having been effected with the Cardinal. Shortly afterward he heard the violinist Veracini at Venice, and was stimulated to more arduous endeavor; sending his wife to relations at Pirano, he retired to Ancona for further study of the violin. About this time (1714) he discovered the combination-tones, and utilized them in perfecting purity of intonation. His fame now increasing, in 1721 he was app. solo violinist and cond. of the orch. at St. Antonio in Padua. He spent the years 1723–5 in Prague as chamber-musician to Count Kinsky, having been invited thither to assist at the coronation of Karl VI; he then resumed his duties at Padua, and in 1728 founded a violin-school there, in which were formed many distinguished violinists (Nardini, Pasqualino, Lahoussaye).—T. was one of the great masters of the violin; his style of bowing still serves as a model, and his compositions are regarded as classics; he publ. op. 1, Six Concertos (1734; 3 republ. in Paris; 3 others republ. there w. 2 viola-parts added by Blainville, as Concerti grossi); also as op. 1, 12 violin-sonatas w. 'cello and cembalo; op. 2, 6 sonatas f. do.; op. 3, 12 sonatas [incl. op. 2] f. violin and bass; op. 4, Sei concerti a violino solo, 2 violini, viola e violoncello o cembalo di concerto; also as op. 4, 6 sonatas f. violin w. basso cont.; op. 5, 6 do.; op. 6, 6 do.; op. 7, 6 do.; op. 8, Sei sonate a 3, due violini col basso; op. 9, 6 do.; and L'Arte dell' arco (reprinted in French by Cartier; also by Choron in Principes de composition, and separately by André); the famous and oft-republished Trillo del diavolo was a posthumous work; the concerts have been republ. in various editions, and in varying combinations; sonatas have been republ. by Alard, Léonard, David, Jensen, Wasielewski, etc.—Theoretical works: Trattato di musica secondo la vera scienza dell'armonia (1754); Risposta alla critica del di lui Trattato di musica di Msgr. Le Serre di Ginevra (1767); De' principj dell' armonia musicale contenuta nel diatonico genere (1767); Lettera alla signora Maddalena Lombardini, inserviente ad una importante lezione per i suonatori di violino (1770; English by Burney, 1771, and Bremner, 1779; German in 1786); and another treatise, only in a French transl. by P. Denis, Traité des agréments de la musique (1782). As a theorist he follows Rameau, and derives the minor chord from an undertone-series opposed to the overtone series; like Zarlino, he regards the minor chord as the opposite of the major.—Bibliography: Fanzago, *Orazione. . . . delle lodi di G. His public début was made in 1858, at an orchestral concert conducted by von Bülow at Berlin. During the next two years he gave concerts in German cities, making Dresden his headquarters; then went to Vienna in 1862, giving orchl. concerts with 'advanced' programs similar to Bülow's at Berlin. Tchaikov'sky, Piotr [Peter] Ilyitch, b. Votkinsk, Government of Viatka, May 7, 1840; d. Petrograd, Nov. 6, 1893 (of cholera). From the age of 7 he had regular lessons on the piano. In 1850 he ent. the preparatory class of the School for Jurisprudence in Petrograd, and two years later his parents settled there permanently. From 1855–8 his piano-teacher was Rudolf Kündinger, under whom he made good, but by no means phenomenal, progress; at the same time he sang in the chorus under the renowned Lomakin. He always loved music; in fact, it was his greatest pleasure, but he had not thought seriously of it as a profession. Having graduated from the law-school in 1859, he was app. to a post in the Ministry of Justice. Before long he began to doubt his fitness for a legal career; his musical talent began to manifest itself more and more, and when even his unmusical father had urged him to devote himself to the art, he began in 1861 to study theory privately with Zaremba. His steady progress strengthened his faith in his talent, so that in 1863 he resigned his government position and entered the newly establ. Cons. in Petrograd, continuing his theoretical studies with Zaremba and attending the classes of Ciardi (fl.), H. Stiehl (org.) and A. Rubinstein (pf.). There he formed a lasting friendship with Herman Laroche, later one of the most influential of Russian critics, who exerted a strong influence upon the development of his musical taste. In 1865 he graduated, winning a prize for a setting of Schiller's An die Freude. When Nikolai Rubinstein founded the Moscow Cons. (1866), he offered T. the position of prof. of harmony. There he remained till 1877, acting from 1872–6 also as critic of the 'Russky Viedomosty,' and attending the first Bayreuth festival of 1876 as its special correspondent. From the beginning N. Rubinstein took a lively interest in T.; as cond. of the Imp. Russ. Mus. Soc. he produced many of the young man's works at his concerts, and recommended him to the influential publisher Jurgenson. In a comparatively short time T. was famous in Moscow; the capital, however, was slow in its appreciation, while in Vienna, Paris and Berlin the first works roused decided opposition, which was overcome only gradually. A love-affair with the famous Desirée Artôt (q. v.) had progressed as far as an engagement (1868), when the advice of his friends prevailed, and he declined playing the rôle of 'husband of his wife.' More serious were the consequences of his hasty marriage to Antonina Ivanovna Milyukova (July 18, 1877), which, after several weeks of misery, ended in separation (Oct. 6). This brief, but bitter, experience brought on a complete nervous collapse. He resigned his post at the Cons., and went to Clarens, Switzerland, to recuperate. Early in 1877 a wealthy widow, Nadezhda Filaretovna von Meck (1831–94), a passionate lover of music, had become interested in T.'s works, and had given him several commissions, for which she had sent him almost extravagant sums. Through N. Rubinstein she learned the details of the composer's plight, and while his friends were trying to raise sufficient funds to enable him to spend a year in Switzerland and Italy, she settled upon him an allowance of 6,000 rubles for life to ensure his financial independence. In 1888 this income was increased by the addition of 3,000 rubles from the Czar's private purse. After his recovery T. never held any positions, but devoted his entire time to composition. Although in 1885 he made his permanent home in Maidanovo, near Klin, he spent much time at the various Russian estates of Mme. von Meck, with his favorite sister, Alexandra Davidov, at Kamenka, and shorter periods in Switzerland, Italy, France and Germany. Always of a shy and retiring disposition, he made no public appearance until 1887 as cond. of his own works in Moscow; from then until his death he was overwhelmed with invitations to conduct in the principal cities of Europe. In May, 1891, he visited America, conducting 4 concerts in New York (in connection with the dedication of Carnegie Hall), 1 in Baltimore and 1 in Philadelphia. In 1893 he was made Mus. Doc. (hon. c.) by the Univ. of Cambridge, England.—Tchaikovsky was a zealous cultivator of national spirit and color in music. His own is full of Russian characteristics, while his broad, passionate cantilena shows unmistakable traces of his love for Italian music. He has frequently used native folk-music as thematic material, but, more than this, his music shows the strange and violent contrasts of mood characteristic of the race; now full of a wild and barbarous energy and fiery intensity; now of an almost maiden tenderness and ingenuousness; now of a black and hopeless melancholy. His highest qualities are shown in his orchestral works, particularly his symphonies, symphonic poems, suites and overtures, of which the orchestration is of the richest modern cast. His numerous operas, mostly on Russian subjects, are little known outside of his native land; but a casual inspection of their scores shows that he was no follower of Wagner, and constructed them closely after old-time models. His songs have a characteristic and poignant melancholy. His first pianoforte-concerto is one of the best-known and most effective modern works of its class, and his solo pianoforte-compositions, though chiefly written in the vein of salon-music, bear the hall-mark of his melodic freshness and originality of harmonic treatment.

At the age of 12 she had learned perfectly the words and music of several operas by merely listening to her elder sister, Eva (Mme. Cleofonte Campanini); after some lessons from her sister, she st. 3 months at the Liceo Musicale in Florence with Ceccherini, continuing the study of répertoire with him privately. After her début as Inez (l'Africaine) at the Teatro Pagliano in Florence, in 1895, she sang in Rome and other Italian cities; then travelled with various companies in South America and Mexico, and in 1904 created a local sensation at the Tivoli Opera House in San Francisco. Although her name appeared in the prospectus of the M. O. H. for the season of 1905–6, she was not heard; instead she went again to South America. On Nov. 2, 1907, she made her first London appearance (as Violetta) and was so successful during that season that Hammerstein eng. her for his Manhattan Opera House in N. Y., where she was first heard in the same rôle on Jan. 15, 1908. During her first season there her success was not extraordinary; but on her return the next season she was hailed as a star of the first magnitude, remaining a powerful drawing-card until the closing of the house (1910); from 1910–13 she made extended concert-tours of the U. S., and sang frequently in opera in special engagements with the Chicago and Boston companies; in 1913–14 she was a regular member of the Chicago Opera Co. Since the outbreak of the war she has been in Florence, devoting her art exclusively to patriotic and charitable purposes. In private life she is Signora Bazelli. Although in the U. S. she has not been heard in more than about a dozen operas, her répertoire comprises almost 40 rôles, the most brilliant ones being those once specially identified with the Patti (Rosina, Violetta, Gilda, Lucia, etc.). Her voice is powerful and of extraordinary purity and beauty, her vocal technic well-nigh flawless. Although she is a greater vocalist than actress, her histrionic ability is above the average expected of coloratura singers.

Teyber (or Tayber) [tī'ber], Anton, born Vienna, Sept. 8, 1754; d. there Nov. 18, 1822. Pupil of Padre Martini at Bologna. From 1792, cembalist at the Imp. Opera, Vienna, and assistant of Salieri; from 1793, court composer and music-master to the Imperial children.—Works: An opera, 2 oratorios, a Passion, a melodrama, many masses, symphonies, string-quartets, minuets and allemandes, etc.—See Q.-Lex.

Tey'ber (or Tayber), Franz, brother of preceding; b. Vienna, Nov. 15, 1756; d. there Oct. 22, 1810. Pianist, pupil of Wagenseil; after a concert-tour in S. Germany and Switzerland, he cond. Schikaneder's itinerant opera-troupe; was then Konzertmeister at Karlsruhe and Bern, and from 1799–1810 composer to Schikaneder's Theater an der Wien. Two months before his death he was app. organist of the Imp. Chapel. Besides several operas and Singspiele, he wrote an oratorio, a mass and other church-music, songs, etc.

Teyte, Maggie [changed original spelling, Tate, at time of début to insure correct pronunciation in France], lyric soprano; born Wolverhampton, April 17, 1889. Began her mus. studies at the R. C. M. in London; 1903–7, pupil of Jean de Reszké in Paris; début as Zerlina at Monte Carlo (Feb., 1907); 1908–10, at the Opéra-Comique; 1910–11, with Beecham Opera Co. in London; 1911–14, member of Chicago Opera Co., making her American début at Philadelphia as Cherubino (Nozze di Figaro; Nov. 4, 1911). At her second appearance she created the rôle of Cendrillon at the Amer. première of Massenet's opera (Phila., Nov. 6, 1911); 1914-5, concert-tour of the U. S.; 1915–17, member of the Boston Natl. Grand Opera Co. During the summer of 1914 she sang with the Boston Opera Co. in Paris, and later toured England with Kubelik. On Oct. 6, 1909, she married Eugène Plumon, a lawyer in Paris, from whom she was div. Nov. 12, 1915. Her voice is warm and sympathetic, and of surprising volume considering her diminutive physique; her graceful figure lends additional charm to her fine impersonations of youthful characters. Her favorite rôles are Mimi (La Bohème) and Mélisande.

Thadewaldt [tah'dĕ-wählt], Hermann, b. Bodenhagen, Pomerania, April 8, 1827; d. Berlin, Feb. 11, 1909. Having taught for some time in England, he returned to Leipzig in 1901, studying for one year with A. Reisenauer; settled in Paris in 1902, where he made his headquarters till 1913; début there (Salle Érard) on Jan. 21, 1903; at first he confined his appearances (in recitals and with orch.) to France, but after 1906 he made extended tours of Germany, Switzerland, England and Russia; since Sept., 1913, he has been principal pf.-instructor at the Cincinnati Cons. (master-class), and has been heard as soloist in the U. S.

Thal'berg, Sigismund, renowned piano-virtuoso and composer; born Geneva, Jan. 7, 1812; d. Naples, April 27, 1871. The natural son of Prince Moritz Dietrichstein and the Baroness von Wetzlar, his father took charge of his education at Vienna, from 1822. Hummel and Sechter were nominally his teachers; but he himself gives the credit for his pianistic training to Mittag, the 1st bassoonist in the Vienna Court Opera. At 14 he already had success in private circles; in 1828 his first three works (Fantaisie and variations on Euryanthe; do. on a Scotch theme; Impromptu on Le Siège de Corinthe) appeared, followed in 1830 by the pf.-concerto in F minor, op. 5. In 1830 he also made a concert-tour through Southern Germany, winning great applause. In 1834 he was app. court pianist at Vienna; in 1835 he excited intense enthusiasm in Paris, and continued his triumphs through Belgium, England, Holland, and Russia. In 1843 he married Mme. Boucher, the daughter of Luigi Lablache, in Paris; in 1845 he undertook a tournée in Spain; in 1851 his first operatic venture, Florinda, failed completely in London, and a second, Cristina di Svezia, met a similar fate in Vienna, 1855; he then set out on a tour through Brazil (1855) and the United States (1856), retiring in 1858 to his villa at Posilippo, near Naples. In 1862 he revisited Paris and London; made a second Brazilian tour in 1863; and in 1864 withdrew permanently to Posilippo.—T. was an executant of the highest rank, unexcelled as an interpreter of salon-music, with a complete command of tone-effect, and a wonderful legato, eliciting from Liszt the remark, 'Thalberg is the only artist who can play the violin on the keyboard.' His technical specialty, since widely imitated, was to play a central melody with the thumb of either hand, surrounding it with brilliant arpeggios and arabesques [see POLLINI, FRANCESCO]. He was the leader of the Vienna school of brilliant piano-playing, the glittering superficiality of which has succumbed to modern Romanticism.—Published works: Op. 5, Gran concerto f. pf.; op. 7, divertissement; op. 15, 19, Caprices; op. 16, 21, 28, 6 Nocturnes; op. 31, Scherzo; op. 32, Andante; op. 35, Grand nocturne; op. 35*bis*, Étrennes aux jeunes pianistes; op. 36, 6 pieces (La Cadence, a study, is No. 1); op. 38, Romance et étude; op. 41, 2 Romances sans paroles; op. 45, Thème orig. et étude; Op. 47, Grandes valses brillantes; op. 55, Le Départ, varié en forme d'étude; op. 57, 10 morceaux (école préparatoire); op. 56, Grande sonate; op. 59, Marche funèbre variée; op. 60, Barcarolle; op. 62, Valse mélodique; op. 64, Les Capricieuses; op. 65, Tarentelle; op. 69, pf.-trio in A; Souvenir de Pest; etc. Among many brilliant transcriptions and fantasias are op. 20 (Huguenots), op. 33 (Moïse), op. 66 (L'elisir d'amore), etc.

Thayer, Alexander Wheelock, b. South Natick, Mass., Oct. 22, 1817; d. Trieste, July 15, 1897. After graduation at Harvard Univ. in 1843, he became asst.-librarian there; during 6 years' work in the library, he matured a plan for writing a detailed and trustworthy biography of Beethoven. For preliminary study, and to collect material, he first spent 2 years (1849–51) in Germany, also writing letters for newspapers; in 1852 he joined the staff of the New York 'Tribune,' and returned to Europe in 1854, where, excepting 2 years (1856–8) spent in Boston, he remained. Dr. Lowell Mason and Mrs. Mehetable Adams (of Cambridge, Mass.) gave generous and disinterested aid at this juncture. In 1862 T. was attached to the American embassy at Vienna; in 1865, Abraham Lincoln appointed him consul at Trieste, a post held during life. He now publ. a Chronologisches Verzeichniss der Werke Ludwig van Beethovens (Berlin, 1865); in 1866 Vol. i of his life-work, Ludwig van Beethovens Leben, appeared in German, translated from the English MS. by Dr. Hermann Deiters (see BEETHOVEN, Bibliography, A [p. 66]). In 1877 he also publ. Ein kritischer Beitrag zur Beethoven-Litteratur. Unhappily, his wonderful capacity for work was overtaxed, and Vol. iv of his nobly conceived work, executed with a painstaking thoroughness and scrupulous fidelity beyond praise, was left unfinished. Though he lived for years in straitened circumstances, he resolutely refused offers from firms like Novello & Co. and G. Schirmer, hoping to recast entirely the English version of his Beethoven.—Cf. H. E. Krehbiel, A. T. and His 'Life of Beethoven,' in 'Mus. Quart.' (Oct., 1917).

E. Church-Music Assoc., etc. Gave free organ-recitals in Boston from 1869; played in the chief cities of America and Europe; and lectured. From 1881–8, organist of the Fifth Av. Presb. Ch., New York. He played with success in all the musical centres of Europe, and visited America several times (first time in 1903). The death of his father (Dec., 1914) interrupted an Amer. tour; he returned to France and served a year in the army. On his return to the U. S., in 1916, he gave evidence of a sudden artistic development almost without parallel, revealing a breadth of conception and an emotional intensity of which his previous performances had given no intimation. His interpretations of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms place him in the front rank of the masters of to-day. He is also an exceptionally fine ensemble-player.

Discouraged by the poor success of the last operas, T. prod. only Betty, a ballet (1846), during 5 years; but then made a brilliant reëntry with Le Caïd (1849), followed by Le Songe d'une Nuit d'été (1850), which won him good standing among French composers of the time. In 1851 he was elected to Spontini's chair in the Académie. The next 5 operas, Raymond (1851), La Tonelli (1853), La Cour de Célimène (1855), Psyché (1857), and Le Carnaval de Venise (1857), achieved only moderate success, and Le Roman d'Elvire (1860) had similar fortune; but with Mignon (Opéra-Comique, Nov. 17, 1866), T. took first place among recent composers of French comedy-opera; Hamlet (Opéra, Mar. 9, 1868) was almost equally successful in Paris; but Mignon has gained world-wide popularity. Gille et Gillotin (1874), Françoise de Rimini (1882), and the ballet La Tempête (Opéra, 1889), complete the list of T.'s dramatic works. In 1871 he succeeded Auber (after the Communist Daniel's brief reign) as Director of the Conservatoire. In 1845 he was created a Chevalier, in 1858 Officer, and in 1868 Commander of the Legion of Honor. Besides operas and ballets, he wrote a cantata for the unveiling of Le Sueur's statue at Abbeville, 1852; the cantata Hommage à Boieldieu, Rouen, 1875; Messe solennelle (1857); Requiem, Marche religieuse, Notre-Dame, 1865; 3 motets w. organ; Fantaisie f. pf. and orch.; a string-quintet in F; a string-quartet in E; a pf.-trio in D m.; 6 Neapolitan canzonets; and a series of 'chœurs orphéoniques' (4-part male choruses) which rank with the best of their kind: Le chant des amis, La Vapeur, Le salut aux chanteurs, France! France!, Le Tyrol, Le Carnaval de Rome, l'Atlantique, Les Traîneaux, Le Temple de la Paix, Paris, La nuit du Sabbat, Les Archers de Bouvines, and Le Forgeron.—Cf. J. Simon, A. T., in 'La Revue de Paris' (Mar., 1896); C. Bellaigue, Études musicales et nouvelles silhouettes des musiciens (Paris, 1898).

Thomas, Theodore, eminent conductor; b. Esens, East Friesland, Oct. 11, 1835; d. Chicago, Jan. 4, 1905. Taught by his father, a violinist, he played in public at 6. In 1845 the family went to New York, where T. soon entered an orchestra; in 1851 he made a concert-tour as a soloist, later touring the country with Jenny Lind, Grisi, Sontag, Mario, etc. In 1855 began the Mason and Thomas soirées [cf. WILLIAM MASON]. Up to 1861 he played in various opera-orchestras, sometimes conducting. In 1864 he organized an orch. for 'Symphony Soirées' at Irving Hall, NewYork, which were continued until 1878 (after 1872 in Steinway Hall); in 1866 he started summer concerts in Terrace Garden, removing in 1868 to Central Park Garden. The influence of these enterprises on musical culture in New York was simply incalculable; T.'s programs attained European celebrity. The first concert-tour with the orch. was made in 1869, with 54 players, and for nine consecutive years he made annual tours of the East and Middle West. In 1873 he established the famous Cincinnati Biennial Fest., which he conducted till his death. One of the fruits of his labors there was the foundation of the Cincinnati Coll. of Music, of which he was pres. and dir. from 1878–80, having given up his own orch. in New York and the conductorship of the N. Y. Philh. Soc. (1877–8) to accept this post. After his resignation he returned to New York, where he immediately reorganized his own orch. and was reëlected cond. of the Philh. Soc. and the Brooklyn Philh. Orch. (having been cond. of the latter in 1862–3, '66–8 and '73–8). Besides conducting these orchl. bodies, he was at different times cond. of the 'N. Y. Mendelssohn Union,' 'N. Y. Chorus Soc.,' 'German Liederkranz' and the 'Brooklyn Philh. Chorus'; from 1885–7 he was cond. and artistic dir. of the American Opera Co. In 1891 he settled permanently in Chicago as cond. of the Chicago Symph. Orch., originally consisting of 60 performers (increased to 90 in 1901). In recognition of T.'s distinguished services a permanent home, Orchestra Hall, was built by popular subscription, and formally opened in Dec., 1904, with a series of festival concerts, which were the last directed by T.; a cold contracted during a rehearsal developed into pneumonia, which after a few days resulted fatally. After his death the name of the orch. was changed to 'Theodore Thomas Orch.'; in 1913 the original title was officially resumed. —The influence of T. upon the musical development of the U. S. has been strong and lasting. Having devoted the best years of his life to raising the musical standard of the East by cultivating a taste for the highest type of symphonic music, he applied himself with undiminished energy and zeal to the musical upbuilding of the Middle West. A severe, almost autocratic drillmaster, his splendid musicianship and lofty idealism invariably commanded the respect and good will of those under his direction. As an arranger of homogeneous, artistic programs he has never been excelled. The list of novelties produced by him is enormous; an indefatigable apostle of Wagner, Liszt and Brahms, he also played for the first time in America many of the larger works of Tchaikovsky, Dvořák, Rubinstein, Bruckner, Goldmark, Saint-Saëns, Cowen, Stanford, Raff, etc.; he introduced Richard Strauss to America (Symph. in F m., Dec. 13, 1884) before that composer had become known even in his own country.—Cf. T. T. A Musical Autobiography, ed. by G. P. Upton (2 vols.; Chicago, 1905); R. F. Thomas, Memoirs of T. T. (New York, 1911).

Törsleff, Ludwig Christian, renowned singing-master; born Assens, Denmark, May 15, 1849; d. Munich, Sept. 21, 1914 (of cancer of the throat). He gave up a flourishing business in Flensburg to cultivate his sympathetic voice (tenor), and was eng. at the court opera in Copenhagen; after a year's leave of absence for further study in Florence he returned in 1885 with his voice almost ruined, and after a few unsucc. appearances retired from the stage. In 1888 he settled in Leipzig, where he became interested in the method of Müller-Brunow (q. v.), which he adopted with good results; 1898–1902, in Copenhagen; from then in Munich. Among his pupils are Katharina Flüggen (his daughter), Ejnar Forchhammer, Emil Holm, Paul Knüpfer, etc.

Toscani'ni, Arturo, distinguished conductor; born Parma, Mar. 25, 1867. St. at the Parma Cons. with Carini (vcl.) and Dacci (comp.), graduating as winner of the 1st prize for 'cello-playing; began his career as 'cellist, and in 1886 was eng. for the opera in Rio de Janeiro (Teatro Dom Pedro II). On the second night of his engagement he made an unexpected début as cond. (with Aida); a new Italian cond. was hissed before the end of the prelude, and as he left the desk, T. immediately took up the baton; his magnetic personality thrilled singers and audience, and at the conclusion he received a veritable ovation and was eng. as regular cond. From there he went to the Teatro Cavignano in Turin, then to Treviso, Bologna and Genoa; in 1898 Gatti-Casazza (q. v.) assumed the management of La Scala in Milan, and eng. T. as principal cond. for the opera and symphony concerts. From 1908, when Gatti-Casazza became dir.-general of the M. O. H. in New York, until 1915, T. was principal conductor there. His début (Aida, Nov. 16, 1908) aroused enthusiasm; after his first introduction as a cond. of Wagner (Götterdämmerung, Dec. 10) critical opinion found expression only in superlatives. He prepared the Amer. premières of Puccini's Le Villi (1908), Catalani's La Wally (1909), Franchetti's Germania (1910), Gluck's Armide (1910), Dukas's Ariane et Barbe-bleue (1911), Wolf-Ferrari's Le Donne curiose (1912) and Amore Medico (1914), Mussorgsky's Boris Godunov (1913), Montemezzi's Amore dei tre Re (1914); he also cond. 2 world-premières at the M. O. H., Puccini's La Fanciulla del West (Dec. 10, 1910) and Giordano's Madame Sans-Gêne (Jan. 25, 1915); as a symphonic cond. he was heard only twice (April 13 and 18, 1913) in a masterly rendition of the same program (Wagner's Faust-Ouvertüre, Strauss's Till Eulenspiegels lustige Streiche and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony). In the spring of 1915 he returned to Italy and placed his art at the service of his country for patriotic and charitable purposes.—Among the world's great orchestral leaders he stands forth as one of the commanding figures. A magnetic personality, he communicates his own enthusiasm to all under his direction. Although he prefers Wagner's music to all other, his readings of the works of all schools and nationalities are equally authoritative. Extreme near-sightedness compelled him very early to commit all scores to memory, so that to-day he conducts by heart almost 100 operas, besides an enormous concert-répertoire.

Shortly after his arrival in America he began work on his Dictionary-Catalogue of Upwards of 28,000 Operas and Operettas which have been perf. on the Public Stage from the Earliest Times to the Present [1905], on which he worked daily for 16 years (publ. Morgantown, 1910). In spite of an enormous expenditure of labor the work serves no useful purpose; it is nothing more than a bare list of titles, each followed by the name, nationality and dates of the composer (only year of birth and death); neither place nor year of perf. of the opera itself is given; even its usefulness as a mere skeleton index is seriously impaired by numerous errors in the spelling of foreign words. Has also publ. Catechism of Music for Beginners, Woman in Music, Let Children Sing, Golden Rules for Singers, etc.; pf.-pcs., songs and part-songs. He has ready for the press (1918) Some 91,000 Birthday Dates of Living and Dead Musicians.

Becoming a soldier in the patriot ranks, he was captured and cast into prison; escaped 6 months afterward, and sailed to Boston, Mass., settling there in 1799. Here he wrote his Vocal Exercises, and Washington's Dead March. Proceeding to New York, he wrote the cantatas The Christian's Joy, and Prophecy; also an opera, The Venetian Maskers. Was manager of a travelling theatrical troupe, lived in Virginia for some years, and settled in Philadelphia in 1822, founding the 'American Conservatorio' in 1823 with his pupil, U. C. Hill. He prod. 2 oratorios, Jerusalem in Affliction (1828) and Daughter of Zion (1829); later 2 cantatas, The Nativity, and The Day of Rest; also instrl. and vocal quartets, trios and duets; songs; etc.; and publ. Rudiments of the Art of Singing and An Introduction to the Art and Science of Music (1828) for his Cons. Pupil of Durante at the Cons. di Loreto, Naples, where he studied 1738–48; after teaching, and writing church-music, for two years, he prod. an opera, Farnace (Teatro San Carlo, 1751), the success of which procured him commissions for others, so that in ten years he brought out 19 dramatic works in Naples, Rome, Florence, Verona, Venice, Parma, Vienna (Ifigenia in Aulide, 1759), etc. In 1758 he was app. maestro to the Duke of Parma, and singing-master to the princesses; his festival opera Ippolito ed Aricia, first given in 1759, and repeated at the wedding of a princess with the Prince of the Asturias in 1765, procured him a life-pension from the King of Spain. From 1765–8 he was Director of the Cons. dell' Ospedaletto at Venice, then resigning in favor of Sacchini in order to succeed Galuppi at Petrograd as court composer to Catherine II. The uncongenial climate compelled him to leave Russia in 1775; he repaired to London, and produced the opera Germondo there in 1776; its cool reception decided him to return to Italy. Here he wrote 5 more operas (he composed 42 in all); but his health was undermined, and he died 3 years after his homecoming. His dramatic sense was keen, his effects natural and striking, his harmonies bold and vigorous.—Besides operas, he comp. an oratorio (Salomone), a Passion, a Stabat Mater, masses, motets, etc.; duets, arias f. soprano w. accomp., and Le 4 stagoni e i 12 mesi dell' anno, a divertimento f. 4 orchestras (Petrograd, 1770).—Cf. Ver'di, (Fortunio) Giuseppe (Francesco), the greatest of Italian opera-composers; born at the village of Le Roncole, n. Busseto, Duchy of Parma, Oct. 10, 1813; d. Milan, Jan. 27, 1901. His father was an innkeeper and grocer; the son's precocious talent was trained for a year by the village organist, Baistrocchi, whom V. succeeded at the age of ten, and for three more by Ferdinando Provesi at Busseto; in 1831, with pecuniary aid from his father's friend Antonio Barezzi of Busseto, he repaired to Milan, but was refused admission to the Conservatory by Basili, the Director, on the score of lack of musical talent. V. took private lessons in composition of Lavigna, cembalist at La Scala; in 1833 he returned to Busseto as conductor of the Philharm. Soc., and organist; and in 1836 married Barezzi's daughter Margherita. In 1838, with his wife and two children, he returned to Milan with the finished score of an opera Oberto, conte di San Bonifacio, which was accepted by Merelli, the impresario for La Scala, and performed with success on Nov. 17, 1839. [Before this time he had written, between 13 and 18, marches for brass band, short symphonies, six concertos and variations f. pf. (which he played himself), many serenate, cantate, arie, duetti, terzetti, and church-works (e. g., a Stabat Mater); also, during the first three years at Milan, 2 symphonies and a cantata; then in Busseto, a Messa, a Vespro, 3 Tantum ergos, other church-music, and choruses to A. Manzoni's tragedies, and Il cinque Maggio.] Merelli immediately commissioned him to write 3 operas, one every eight months, at 4,000 lire apiece, with half the proceeds of the copyright. The first was a comic opera, Un giorno di regno. In the midst of the work, his wife and both children died in swift succession; small wonder that an opera distasteful in subject, and completed under such conditions, should have proved a 'dead failure' (Milan, Sept. 5, 1840; a few subsequent perfs., at other theatres, given as Il finto Stanislao). V. was so discouraged and despondent, that he determined to give up composition for good. However, some time after, Merelli persuaded him to set to music Solera's Nabucco (Nebuchadnezzar), which was given at La Scala on Mar. 9, 1842 (N. Y., April 4, 1848) with tremendous applause, Signorina Strepponi [q. v.] taking the role of Abigaile. The success of I Lombardi alla prima Crociata, also at La Scala, on Feb. 11, 1843, was yet more emphatic, especially as voicing, symbolically, the national aspirations of the patriotic Milanese. This work has survived the test of time; it is still played in Italy, and was successful in Brussels and New York (Mar. 3, 1847) though less so at Paris (Nov. 26, 1847, with new libretto and ballet as Jérusalem; under which title it was revived at Amsterdam in 1895; in 1851 it was prod. at Constantinople, with alterations of the text, as Giselda); Ernani, written for La Fenice Th. at Venice after Victor Hugo's Hernani, was greeted (Mar. 9, 1844; Philadelphia, July 14, 1847) with enthusiasm, and prod. on 15 different stages within 9 months. Now followed a series of works which added nothing to the composer's fame—I due Foscari (Rome, Nov. 3, 1844; N. Y., June 9, 1846), Giovanna d'Arco (Milan, Feb. 15, 1845), Alzira (Naples, Aug. 12, 1845), Attila (Venice, Mar. 17, 1846; N. Y., Mar. 15, 1850); Macbeth (Florence, Mar. 14, 1847; N. Y., 1848); I Masnadieri [after Schiller's Räuber] (London, H. M.'s Th., July 22, 1847; N. Y., June 2, 1860); Jérusalem [I Lombardi revised and augmented] (Paris, Grand Opéra, Nov. 26, 1847), Il Corsaro (Trieste, Oct. 25, 1848), and La battaglia di Legnano [later as l'Assedio d'Arlem] (Rome, Jan. 27, 1849). Luisa Miller had real success at the Teatro San Carlo, Naples, Dec. 8, 1849 (Philadelphia, Oct. 27, 1852), and still holds the stage in Italy. Stiffelio (Trieste, Nov. 16, 1850; prod. later as Guglielmo Welingrode; also, with another libretto, as Aroldo) was a failure. Rigoletto, written in 40 days, and brought out at Venice, La Fenice Th., Mar. 11, 1851 (N. Y., 1853) [has also been given as Viscardello, Clara di Pert and Lionello, with alterations of text], ushered in Verdi's most brilliant period; it was followed by Il Trovatore (Rome, Apollo Th., Jan. 19, 1853; N. Y., May 2, 1855) and La Traviata (Venice, La Fenice Th., Mar. 6, 1853; N. Y., Dec. 3, 1856; also given as Violetta), works which established his fame as the greatest living Italian composer of opera. For the ensuing 18 years, no signal triumph was recorded; Les Vêpres siciliennes (Paris, Opéra, June 13, 1855; N. Y., Nov. 7, 1859; in Italian I Vespri siciliani; also given as Giovanna di Guzman), Simon Boccanegra (Venice, Mar. 12, 1857; revised, and successfully revived at Milan, April 12, 1881), Aroldo [a revision of Stiffelio] (Rimini, Aug. 16, 1857), Un Ballo in maschera (Rome, Feb. 17, 1859; N. Y., 1859), La Forza del Destino (Petrograd, Nov. 10, 1862; N. Y., Feb. 2, 1865), Macbeth [revised] (Paris, April 21, 1865), and Don Carlos (Paris, Opéra, Mar. 11, 1867), were received either coolly, or with moderate applause. In La Forza del Destino, however, began a transition to a richer and more elaborate style of instrumentation and harmony, which attained very marked development in Aida, written for the Khedive of Egypt, and first perf. at Cairo, Dec. 24, 1871; its overwhelming success there was intensified at Milan (La Scala, Feb. 8, 1872), and good fortune attended its production throughout Europe (Berlin and Madrid, 1874; Vienna, Petrograd and Warsaw, 1875; Paris and London, 1876; Brussels, 1877; etc.), and America (N. Y., Nov. 26, 1873). To this day it has remained not only the most popular of V.'s operas, but one of the most popular of the entire répertoire. The next work was not an opera, but the Manzoni Requiem, written as a tribute to the great poet, and performed for the first time at St. Mark's Cathedral, in Milan, on the first anniversary of his death (May 22, 1874; N. Y., Nov. 17, 1874). After Rossini's death (1868) V. conceived the idea of honoring the memory of the 'Swan of Pesaro' by a requiem to which each of the 13 foremost composers of Italy was to contribute one number (V. reserving for himself the last, the Libera). Although the plan fell through because of lack of coöperation, V. wrote his number, which he later incorporated in the Manzoni Requiem. In Italy the new work was received with boundless enthusiasm; but for many years its dramatic intensity proved an obstacle to its proper appreciation in Germany and England. The next work, Otello (Milan, La Scala, Feb. 5, 1887; N. Y., April 16, 1888) came as a double surprise. In the first place, the world, not having heard from the composer for 13 years, had come to the conclusion that V. had actually closed his career; then the new work apparently was so radically different from all its predecessors, that the effect, upon musicians and public alike, was nothing less than startling. But all agreed that even Aida had been surpassed. Still greater was the surprise and wonder caused by the master's last opera, Falstaff (Milan, La Scala, Feb. 9, 1893; N. Y., Feb. 4, 1895), generally regarded as V.'s masterpiece, and undoubtedly the greatest musical comedy with the single exception of the incomparable Meistersinger. Five years later (1898) appeared the master's swan-song under the collective title Quattro Pezzi sacri (Ave Maria and Stabat Mater for mixed ch. a capp.; Laudi alla Vergine Maria for fem. ch. a capp.; Te Deum for double ch. w. orch.). Besides the works enumerated V. wrote Inno delle Nazioni (for the London Exhib. of 1862); a str.-quartet in E m. (1873); Pater noster for 5-part ch. a capp. (1880); Ave Maria for sop. and strings (1880); Sei Romanze (Non t'accostare all' urna; More, Elisa; In solitaria stanza; Nell'orror di notte oscura; Perduta ho la pace; Deh pietosa); 2 songs for bass, L'Esule and La Seduzione; Guarda che bianca luna, nocturne for sop., ten. and bass w. fl. obbl.; Album di sei Romanze (Il Tramonto; La Zingara; Ad una Stella; Lo Spazzacamino; Il Mistero; Brindisi); Il Poveretto, romanza; Tu dici che non m'ami, stornello.

Verdi's works naturally group themselves into three periods. The operas of the first period, ending with Stiffelio (1850), while making concessions to the prevailing taste, give evidence of an inborn dramatic instinct superior to that of any of his compatriots, a fact which Italian critics recognized from the beginning. The second period is ushered in by Rigoletto (1851) and ends with Don Carlos (1867). Whereas during the first decade of his career V. wrote at least one opera every year, new works now appear at increasingly longer intervals; there is a steady improvement in the technical workmanship, and a noticeable growth as regards artistic moderation and refinement of taste. His powerful individuality saved V. from ever becoming an imitator. The masterpieces of the third period, beginning with Aida (1871), are the natural fruit of his constant striving for perfection. While the general public may wonder at an apparently complete change of style, the attentive student of V.'s scores can trace the logical and unbroken development of a genius who began as a successful composer of operas appealing to the taste of the times, and ended as a master whose work lives beyond the grave. It is known that V. was a great admirer and close student of Wagner's scores; but in all his music there is not a single reminiscence, nor one measure for which he is indebted to the Bayreuth master. The Wagnerian influence in Otello and Falstaff is strictly confined to the dramatic construction, for which Boito, the librettist, is responsible. And this influence is legitimate and good. But the musical treatment is Verdi's own, differing from that of his earlier operas in degree and quality, not in kind. The vocal melody still reigns supreme, while the orchestra furnishes a wonderfully expressive accompaniment. Wagner's fundamental principle of the 'Leitmotif' and continuous thematic development in the orchestra V. did not adopt; and he makes but sparing use of the 'typical phrase,' a sort of musical quotation already employed by Weber.—Innumerable honors were showered upon V. by royalty, societies and individuals; after the première of Falstaff the King of Italy wished to create him 'Marchese di Busseto,' but V. declined the honor. In 1849 he married Giuseppina Strepponi (q. v.), and bought the magnificent estate Sant' Agata, near Busseto. After his wife's death (1897) he founded in Milan, to her memory, the 'Casa di Riposo pei Musicisti' (opened in 1899), a home for aged musicians of either sex; for its maintenance he set aside immediately 2,500,000 lire ($500,000), and after his death the royalties of all his works (payable for 30 years). The full extent of this last provision may be estimated from the fact that during his life V. received in royalties from Aida alone the sum of 4,000,000 lire ($800,000).

Vere, Clémentine Duchêne de [de Vere-Sapio], b. in Paris. Her father was a Belgian nobleman; her mother, an English lady. Her mus. education was completed under Mme. Albertini-Baucardé, at Florence; successful début there at 16, as Marguerite de Valois in Les Huguenots; then sang with equal fortune at leading theatres in Italy, France, Spain and Mexico; was also welcomed in Berlin, London, Australia and the United States as a highly accomplished concert- and oratorio-singer. At New York, in 1896, she assumed the part of Marguerite in Berlioz's Damnation de Faust; in 1897, at the M. O. H., she interpreted the rôles of Violetta, Gilda, Micaëla, Marguerite de Valois, the Infanta (Le Cid), Marguerite (Gounod's Faust), and Ophelia, with good success. Her voice is a well-schooled, powerful, and brilliant high soprano; she excels in coloratura. Other chief rôles are Lucia and Dinorah. In 1892 she married the conductor Romualdo Sapio.

Verstov'sky, Alexiey Nikolaievitch, b. on the family estate in the Govt. of Tambov, Mar. 2, 1799; d. Moscow, Nov. 17, 1862. While pursuing the regular course of engineering in Petrograd, he also st. privately with Steibelt and Field (pf.), Böhm and Maurer (vl.), Brandt and Zeuner (cpt.) and Tarquini (voice). He began his career with a vaudeville, Babushkinÿ popugai [Grandmother's Parrots], prod. in Petrograd in 1819; in 1824 he was app. inspector of the Imp. theatres in Moscow, and in 1842 general manager. He is the most important of the predecessors of Glinka; facile invention and a pronounced melodic gift won for his works immediate and considerable popularity; but in spite of his excellent teachers, V. technically never rose above the level of the talented amateur, for which reason his works did little for the advancement of national art.—Works: The operas [all prod. in Moscow] Pan Tvardovsky (1828), Vadim ili Dvienadtsat spiashtchich diev (V., or Twelve Sleeping Maids; 1832), Askoldova mogila (Askold's Grave; 1835; his finest work, still played to-day), Toska po rodinie (Homesickness; 1835), Tchurova dolina (The Boundary Vale; 1841), Gromoboi (1858); 22 vaudevilles and operettas, 10 dramatic scenes, incid. music to many plays, choruses and songs.— Cf. N. Findeisen, A. N. V., in 2d suppl. of 'Ezhegodnik Imp. Teat.' [Year-Book of the Imp. Theatres] (1896–7); also 'Russk. Muz. Gaz.' (No. 1, 1899).

Vesque von Püttlingen, Johann (pen-name J. Hoven), b. Opole, Poland, July 23, 1803; d. Vienna, Oct. 30, 1883. Intended for a government career, he took the degree of Dr. juris at Vienna, and became a councillor of state; but studied music under Moscheles and Sechter, was an excellent pianist, and made his mark as a comp. of operas [all prod. at Vienna]: Turandot, 1838; Johanna d'Arc, 1840; Liebeszauber [Käthchen von Heilbronn], 1845; Ein Abenteuer Karls II., 1850; Der lustige Rath, 1852; and Lips Tellian, 1854. Also publ. Das musikalische Autorrecht (1865).—Cf. Anon., V. von P. (Vienna, 1887); E. Hanslick, V. von P., in 'Musikalisches Skizzenbuch' (Berlin, 1888).

Viada'na, Ludovico (da), recte Ludovico Grossi, born Viadana, n. Mantua, 1564; d. Gualtieri, May 2, 1645. Maestro at Mantua Cathedral, 1594–1609; later at Fano, Papal States, at Concordia in Venetia, and finally at Mantua in 1644. This famous church-composer was formerly accredited with the invention of the basso continuo (thorough-bass); but Peri's Euridice (publ. 1600) has a figured bass in certain numbers, as well as Banchieri's Concerti ecclesiastici (publ. 1595); whereas V.'s Cento concerti . . . con il basso continuo did not appear till 1602. Apparently, however, he was the first to write church-concertos with so few parts that the organ-continuo was employed as a necessary harmonic support. A very prolific composer, he publ. numerous masses, psalms, magnificats, lamentations, motets, etc.—Cf. A. Parazzi, Della Vita di L. Grossi da V. (Milan, 1876); F. X. Haberl, in 'Kchm. Jahrb.' (1881) and 'Musica Sacra' (1897).—See also Q.-Lex.

Viane'si, Auguste-Charles-Léonard-François, b. Leghorn, Nov. 2, 1837; d. New York, Nov. 11, 1908. He finished his mus. education in Paris, whither he had come in 1857 with a letter of recommendation to Rossini; in 1859 became cond. at Drury Lane, London; was then at New York, Moscow and Petrograd, later conducting Italian opera for 12 years at Covent Garden; also cond. Italian opera-troupes in many other cities. On July 1, 1887, he was chosen to succeed Altès as 1st 'chef d'orchestre' at the Grand Opéra, Paris; he conducted during the opening season of the M. O. H. success in Paris and London; on several occasions he appeared as cond. at the Opéra. Viardot-Garcia [v'yăhr-doh'-găhr-thē'ăh], (Michelle-Ferdinande-) Pauline, famous dramatic singer, daughter of Manuel del Popolo Garcia; born Paris, July 18, 1821; d. there May 18, 1910. She was taken by her parents to England and America; had pf.-lessons from Vega, organist at Mexico Cath., also (on returning to Paris in 1828) from Meysenberg and Liszt. Her father and mother both gave her vocal instruction; Reicha was her teacher in harmony. Her concert début was at Brussels in 1837; after singing in Germany and Paris, she came out in opera at London, 1839, as Desdemona in Othello, and was eng. by Viardot, the director of the Théâtre Italien, Paris. She sang there until her marriage in 1841 with Louis Viardot (b. Dijon, July 31, 1800; d. Paris, May 5, 1883); he then accompanied her on long tours throughout Europe. In 1849 she created the rôle of Fides in Le Prophète at the Grand Opéra, Paris, and that of Sapho in Gounod's opera, 1851; after another succession of tours, she took the rôle of Orphée in Berlioz's revival of Gluck's opera at the Th.-Lyrique, 1859, singing the part 150 nights to crowded houses. In 1861 she took part in the revival of Gluck's Alceste, most admirably interpreting the excessively difficult title-rôle. She retired to Baden-Baden in 1863; from 1871 she dwelt in Paris and Bougival. Her voice was a mezzo-soprano of extraordinary compass (from c to f^3), and while neither sweet nor even, it lent itself readily to every form of dramatic expression. She was a wonderful actress. For some years she taught at the Paris Cons.; among her pupils were Désirée Artôt, Orgeni, Antoinette Sterling, and Marianne Brandt. A thoroughly trained musician, she also composed operas, one of which, Le dernier Sorcier, was perf. at Weimar (1869), Karlsruhe and Riga as Der letzte Zauberer; this opera, l'Orge, Cendrillon and Trop de femmes, were given at her private theatre in Baden-Baden. About 60 vocal melodies were published, and won wide popularity; also 6 pieces f. pf. and violin, and an École classique de chant. Her daughter is Mme. Louise Héritte-Viardot (q. v.); two other daughters, Mme. Chamerot-V., and Marianne V., were fine concert-singers.—Cf. La Mara, P. V.-G. (Leipzig, 1882); L. H. Torrigi, P. V.-G. Sa biographie, ses compositions, son enseignement (Geneva, 1901); C. H. Kaminski, Lettres à Mlle. V. d'Ivan Tourguéneff (Paris, 1907); P. V.-G. to J. Rietz. Letters of Friendship, in 'Mus. Quart.' (July, 1915–Jan., 1916).

Vicentino [-chĕhn-tē'-], Nicola, b. Vicenza, 1511; d. Rome, 1572. Pupil of Willaert at Venice; maestro and music-master to the Prince d'Este at Ferrara; then for several years in the service of Cardinal Ippolito d'Este at Rome. Here his book of madrigals a 5, an attempt to revive the chromatic and enharmonic genera of the Greeks, led to an academic controversy with the learned Portuguese musician Lusitano; defeated, V. publ. a theoretical treatise, L'antica musica ridotta alla moderna prattica (1555), which likewise contains a description of his invention, an instr. called the archicembalo (having 6 keyboards, with separate strings and keys for distinguishing the ancient genera —diatonic, chromatic, and enharmonic). He also invented and described (1561) an 'Archi-organo.' In chromatic composition he was followed by Cyprian de Rore and Gesualdo. His work paved the way for the monodic style, and the eventual disuse of the church-modes. —Cf. Riemann, Geschichte der Musiktheorie vom 9.–19. Jahrhundert (Leipzig, 1898).

Vieuxtemps [v'yö-tähn'], Henri, b. Verviers, Belgium, Feb. 20, 1820; d. Mustapha, Algiers, June 6, 1881. Famous violinist; his first teacher was his father, a piano-tuner and instrument-maker, who soon turned him over to Lecloux, with whom he made a concert-tour at 8. From 1829–30 he studied with de Bériot at Brussels; played successfully at concerts in Paris; studied harmony with Sechter at Vienna in 1833, while on a German tour; visited London in 1834, and took a course in composition with Reicha at Paris in 1835, producing some original works next year in Holland. In 1837 he revisited Vienna, and made successful Russian tours in 1838–9; composed the Concerto No. 1, in E, and the Fantaisie-Caprice in A, making with the former, especially, a profound impression at Antwerp (1840), and at Paris and London (1841). From 1844–5 he toured America; from 1846–52 he was solo violinist to the Czar, and prof. at the Petrograd Cons.; then recommenced his wanderings. He twice revisited America; in 1857, with Thalberg, and in 1870, with Christine Nilsson and Marie Krebs. From 1871–3 he was prof. of violin-playing at the Brussels Cons.; in the latter year a stroke of paralysis, affecting his left side, cut short his career as a virtuoso; though he still taught for a time, after partial recovery. In 1844 he married Josephine Eder (born Vienna, Dec. 15, 1815; d. Celle-St.-Cloud, June 29, 1868), an excellent pianist. Viot'ti, Giovanni Battista, eminent violinist and composer, was born at Fontaneto da Pò, Vercelli, Italy, May 23, 1753; he died in London, March 3, 1824. His father, a blacksmith, gave him a little violin, which he learned to play without tuition, and attracted the attention of the Bishop of Strambino, who recommended him to Alfonso Del Pozzo, Prince della Cisterna; the latter confided him to the teaching of Pugnani at Turin. V. soon entered the court orchestra; in 1780 he made a grand tour to Germany, Poland and Russia with Pugnani, and was fêted at the court of Catherine II. Repairing to London in 1782, he won signal triumphs; later, at Paris, he played repeatedly at the Concerts Spirituels, where his art was acknowledged as unrivalled. It happened that one of his concerts in 1783 was poorly attended, while in the next concert a mediocre violinist won great applause from a large audience; this so irritated V. that he abruptly closed his public appearances, and devoted himself to teaching and composing, at the same time acting as accompanist to Queen Marie Antoinette, and 'maître de chapelle' to the Prince de Soubise. Failing in his attempt to obtain the directorship of the Opéra in 1787, he joined Léonard, the Queen's hairdresser, in establishing an Italian opera, opened at the Tuileries in 1789, transferred to the Théâtre de la Foire St.-Germain in 1790, and to the newly erected Théâtre Feydeau, where the Revolution ruined their enterprise. V., obliged to recommence his virtuoso-career, went to London, and gave a series of most successful concerts at the Hanover Square Rooms; but a rumor gained credence that he was an emissary of the revolutionists, and he thought it advisable to leave England, retiring to Hamburg until 1794, when he resumed concert-giving in London; was manager of the Italian Opera in the ensuing winter, and director of the Opera Concerts in 1795. Ill success caused him to embark in the wine-trade. On a visit to Paris in 1802, he was persuaded to play before Cherubini and others, and, to their astonishment, outrivalled his earlier performances. He finally settled in Paris as Director of the Opéra from 1819–22, when he resigned with a pension of 6000 francs; he died while on a pleasure-trip.—On account of his influence as a player and teacher (especially through his two pupils Rode and Baillot), and the breadth and dignity of his works, V. has been styled 'the father of modern violin-playing.' His compositions, more particularly of the maturer period, show great refinement and skill in workmanship, and are classics of violin-literature; he was the first to write violin-concertos in the broad modern sonata-form, and displaying the full resources of the orchestra. He publ. 29 violin-concertos (No. 22, in A m., is still a favorite), 2 Concertantes f. 2 violins, 21 string-quartets, 21 trios f. 2 violins and viola, 51 violin-duos (many interesting and valuable), 18 sonatas with bass, 3 Divertissements (Nocturnes) f. pf. and violin, and a pf.-sonata.—Cf. F. Fayolle, Notices sur Corelli . . . et Viotti (Paris, 1810); F. Baillot, Notice sur V. (ib., 1825); E. F. Miel, Notice historique (1827); A. M. and G. S. M. (among his pupils are Louise Kirkby-Lunn and Agnes Nicholls); made Knight of the Crown of Italy in 1880. He succeeded Schnorr von Carolsfeld (d. 1865) as the model Tristan in Wagner's opera, and for several years was the only interpreter of that rôle. He was one of the greatest Wagner singers, and frequently sang at Bayreuth. In the first performances of Rheingold (1869) and Walküre (1870) in Munich he created the rôles of Loge and Siegmund, resp.; sang Loge in Bayreuth in 1876. He prod. the operas Der Kaufmann von Smyrna at Mayence, 1780, and Albert III. von Bayern at Munich, 1781; from 1783–6 he travelled in France (his opera, La Kermesse, failed totally at Paris in 1783), Spain, and the East; from 1786–99 he was court cond. at Stockholm, where he founded a music-school. Having invented a system for the simplification of the organ, he travelled as a concert-organist, with a portable organ called 'orchestrion,' to Copenhagen, Hamburg, Amsterdam, London, Paris, etc., explaining his system, and obtaining various orders for remodeling organs according to it. By uniting an 8-foot pipe with a 5⅓-foot ('quint') pipe, he obtained a 16-foot tone through the tones of combination, an idea still put in practice by combining a 16-foot pipe with a 10⅔-foot pipe to get a 32-foot tone; most of his other 'simplifications,' such as discarding mixtures and display-pipes, have not found favor. In 1807 he became court Kapellm. at Darmstadt, where he establ. a third 'Tonschule,' in which Carl Maria von Weber and Meyerbeer were taught [at Vienna (1803–4) Weber had also been his pupil]; both were doubtless strongly influenced by the liberal and aggressive theories of their teacher.—Vogler's writings are Tonwissenschaft und Tonsetzkunst (1776), Stimmbildungskunst (1776), and Churpfälzische Tonschule (1778), all 3 republ. together as Mannheimer Tonschule; a monthly paper, 'Betrachtungen der Mannheimer Tonschule' (1778–81); Inledning til harmoniens könnedom (Stockholm, 1795); Swedish methods for pf., organ and thorough-bass (1797); Choralsystem (Copenhagen, 1800); Data zur Akustik (1800); Handbuch zur Harmonielehre (1802); Über die harmonische Akustik (1807); Gründliche Anweisung zum Klavierstimmen (1807); Deutsche Kirchenmusik (1807); Über Choral- und Kirchengesänge (1814); System für den Fugenbau.—Compositions: Operas (besides 3 mentioned above) Erwin und Elvira (Darmstadt, 1781; Paris, 1782); Castor und Pollux (in Ital. at Munich, 1784; in Ger. at Mannheim, 1791); Eglé (Stockholm, 1778); Gustavus Adolphus (Swedish opera, Stockholm, 1791); Hermann of Unna [also as H. of Staufen] (drama by Skjöldebrand; Copenhagen, 1800); Samori (Vienna, 1804); Der Admiral (Darmstadt, 1810); Le Patriotisme (written in 1778 for the Paris Opéra; not prod.);—overtures and entr'actes to Hamlet; choruses to Athalia; ballets, etc.;—much church-music (masses, a Requiem, Miserere, Te Deum, psalms, motets, etc.);—a symphony, overtures, a pf.-concerto, a pf.-quartet (called Der eheliche Zwist), Polymelos, ou caractères de musique des différentes nations (f. pf. and strings); a concerto, preludes, chorales, etc., f. organ, etc.—Bibliography: J. Vuillaume [vüē-yohm'], Jean-Baptiste, famous violin-maker; born Mirecourt, Dept. of Vosges, France, Oct. 7, 1798; d. Paris, Feb. 19, 1875. He came of a family of violin-makers, and learned the trade from his father, Claude V. [1772–1834]. At 19 he went to Paris, and worked with Chanot till 1821, and from 1821–5 for Lété, with whom he then entered into partnership. After Lété's retirement in 1828, V. worked alone, and put his own name on several instrs. which he had constructed with the greatest care; but sales were slow, as the craze for old Italian violins had just set in. Unable to make headway against the prevailing fashion, he deftly turned it to account; after long and patient labor he placed a 'Stradivarius' violin on the market for 300 francs, bearing the master's label, and possessing a full, sonorous tone. Thenceforward he could hardly keep pace with the orders for similar instrs.; he also built 'celli for 500 francs. The sight of a Duiffopruggar viola da gamba inspired him with the idea of further imitations; hence the hundreds of 'Duiffopruggar' violins and 'celli with their quaint shape, carved scrolls, inlays, and the motto 'viva fui in sylvis, etc.' By dint of indefatigable researches and experiments, V. carried the construction of these various instrs. to the highest perfection. His own inventions were numerous:—in 1851 the huge 'Octobasse,' a double-bass 4 metres in length, 3-stringed (CC-GG-C), with a special lever-mechanism to aid the left hand (an 'octobasse' is in the Museum of the Paris Cons.); in 1855 a viola of broader and higher model, the 'contre-alto,' with double strength of tone, but clumsy to play; in 1867 a kind of mute, the 'pédale sourdine'; also a machine for manufacturing gut-strings of perfectly equal thickness. He likewise formulated the laws governing the tapering of the stick of the Tourte bow.

Riemann in Hamburg and Sondershausen (pf. and theory); on his return to Riga he was chosen cond. of the 'Wagnerverein' (Pres., K. F. Wach'tel, Theodor, famous stage-tenor; born Hamburg, Mar. 10, 1823; d. Frankfort-on-Main, Nov. 14, 1893. According to W.'s own account, his father was a 'Fuhrherr' (livery-stable keeper), not a 'Droschkenkutscher' (cabman). He carried on the business from the age of 17, after his father's death. His voice was 'dicovered' by some customers of his, with whom he happened to join in quartet-singing; it was trained by Fräulein Grandjean of Hamburg, and his successful début followed in about 18 months. After singing heroic parts in the chief German cities, he went to Vienna for further study. In 1862, and often thereafter, he appeared in London. In 1865 he was eng. for the Berlin Royal Opera. In 1869 he sang in Paris; went to the United States in 1871, at first as a concert-singer, later for a season of opera at the Stadt Theatre, New York; and reappeared in America in 1875, singing in Italian and German opera. After this, having accumulated quite a fortune, he accepted no fixed engagement. His voice was a powerful and brilliant lyric tenor of delightful timbre, brought under good control by long routine; he was admirable in theatrical rôles like that of the Postillion in Adam's Postillon de Longjumeau, which he sang over 1,200 times, George Brown in La Dame blanche, Manrico in Trovatore, Lyonel in Martha, Arnold in Tell, Raoul in Les Huguenots, Stradella and Eleazar; his sole attempt as a Wagner singer, in Lohengrin (Leipzig, 1876), was a dismal failure.

Wagner [vahg'ner], (Wilhelm) Richard, the grandest and most original dramatic composer of all times, was born at Leipzig, (Brühl, No. 88,) May 22, 1813; died in Venice, Feb. 13, 1883. His father, clerk in the city police-court, died when W. was but six months old; his mother, Johanne Rosine, née Peetz, soon after married the actor and playwright Ludwig Geyer of Dresden. In that city W. attended the Kreuzschule until 1827; he was a good Greek scholar, and showed special aptitude for German verse, writing a grand tragedy, Leubald und Adelaïde, in Shakespearian style at the age of 14; but evinced no particular talent for music. His step-father died in 1821; in 1827 W. entered the Nikolai Gymnasium in Leipzig, whither the family had returned when his sister Rosalie obtained a favorable engagement at the City Theatre there. In Dresden, Weber's music had already made a strong impression on Wagner; at Leipzig, as he himself writes, he was 'overpowered' on hearing a Beethoven symphony at the Gewandhaus. He studied Logier's Thoroughbass by himself, and then had regular lessons in theory from the organist Gottlieb Müller, writing a string-quartet, a sonata, and an aria, but profited little from this teacher's pedantic instructions. In 1830, after matriculation as a student of philology and esthetics at Leipzig University, he took a six-months' course in composition under Theodor Weinlig, then cantor of the Thomasschule; two works of this period, a pf.-sonata in 4 movements (op. 1) and a 4-hand Polonaise (op. 2), were printed by Breitkopf & Härtel, and show, both in melody and harmony, indications of W.'s later individuality. He also gave himself up to a thorough and enthusiastic study of Beethoven's symphonies; and in 1832 wrote a symphony in 4 movements in C major, which he offered for performance at Vienna and Prague; it was produced at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig, on Jan. 10, 1833. While in Prague, he wrote his first opera-libretto, Die Hochzeit, of which he composed an introduction, a septet, and a chorus, afterwards abandoning the work on account of objections raised by his sister Rosalie. In 1833 he began his career as a professional musician, being invited by his brother Albert, stage-manager and singer at the Würzburg Theatre, to take the position of chorusmaster there. He found leisure to compose a romantic opera in 3 acts, Die Feen, to a libretto of his own after La Donna serpente by Gozzi; it was accepted, but never performed, by the Leipzig theatre-director Ringelhardt (first given at Munich, June 29, 1888). In 1834 he was made conductor of the Magdeburg Th.; he brought out two overtures, to Die Feen and Columbus [Apel], songs to the farce Der Berggeist, etc.; and finished book and score of a 2-act opera, Das Liebesverbot [after Shakespeare's Measure for Measure], the performance of which, on March 29, 1836, after hurried rehearsals, ended in chaos. Failing to bring it out at Leipzig and Berlin, he repaired to Königsberg, became conductor of the theatre, and married (Nov. 24, 1836) the actress Wilhelmine Planer. His sole new work here was the overture Rule Britannia. Next year he was appointed conductor of the Riga opera, newly opened under Holtei; he also conducted orchestral concerts, and completed the libretto of Rienzi, der letzte der Tribunen, a tragic opera in five acts, of which he composed the first two in Riga. Inspired by the hope of equalling Meyerbeer's triumphs on the stage of the Grand Opéra at Paris, W. set out for that city in July, 1839, his contract at Riga having expired; the events of the stormy voyage, heightened by his previous perusal of the legend of the Flying Dutchman, made an indelible impression on his mind. He passed 4 weeks at Boulogne in Meyerbeer's society, who gave him letters to musicians and publishers in Paris; he arrived there with his wife in September, and remained there until 1842. Unsuccessful in his attempts to get a hearing for Rienzi, he found himself in dire straits, and supported himself by song-writing, arranging dances for piano and cornet, preparing the piano-score of Halévy's Reine de Chypre, and other operas, writing articles for musical papers, etc. In 1840, in the midst of his troubles, he wrote the grand Faust-Ouvertüre, intended for the first movement of a 'Faust Symphony'; in November of that year, the score of Rienzi was finished, and sent to the Intendant of the Dresden Court Theatre. Sketches for Der fliegende Holländer had also been submitted to the Director of the Opéra, who viewed them with approval, but ended by giving the libretto to Foucher for versification, and forcing W. to accept 400 francs for his share in the work. W. lost no time in setting his own poem, completing the score in 7 weeks; on Meyerbeer's recommendation it was accepted at Berlin, but not performed; applications to other German theatres were equally unsuccessful. [On Nov. 9, 1842, the French version, Le Vaisseau fantôme, set to music by Dietsch, chef d'orchestre at the Opéra, was unsuccessfully produced.] Rienzi, however, had finally been accepted at Dresden, and in April, 1842, W. left Paris to superintend the rehearsals; it was produced on Oct. 20 with great success, which induced the direction to bring out Der fliegende Holländer on Jan. 2, 1843. But the step from the grandiose grand-opera style of Rienzi to the fervent romanticism of the Holländer was too long for the average critic and musician to take; the protests raised against the almost crudely realistic instrumentation, the pathetic declamation, the suppression of the traditional divisions of musical numbers and scenes, etc., started the opposition to Wagner which grew in intensity for the next quarter of a century. Nevertheless, in the same month W. was appointed conductor of the Dresden Opera, succeeding the deceased Morlacchi. In this position he developed great activity for the following 6 years, bringing out the best operas (Iphigenie in Aulis, Der Freischütz, Euryanthe, Don Giovanni, Die Zauberflöte, Fidelio, etc.) in masterly fashion; he also conducted the Dresden Liedertafel, for which he wrote a 'biblical scene,' Das Liebesmahl der Apostel, for 3 choirs of male voices singing at first a cappella, finally with full orch. The 3-act opera Tannhäuser und der Sängerkrieg auf Wartburg, was finished in 1844; the first performance took place at Dresden, Oct. 19, 1845, arousing more strenuous opposition than the Holländer; now the critics discovered that W. had neither 'melody' nor 'form,' a phrase on which the changes have been rung ad nauseam ever since; still, the opera made its way slowly to the principal German stages (Weimar, 1849; Wiesbaden, 1852; Kassel, 1853; Munich, 1855; Berlin, 1856; Vienna, 1857; etc.). It was Wagner's misfortune to be within the peculiar sphere of the conservative (not to say narrow-minded) Dresden critic Schladebach, whose opinions were echoed by the press of other German capitals, and created a strong prejudice among theatre-managers and influential musicians. Liszt and Spohr did, however, recognize W.'s lofty aims; the first-named later became his foremost champion. After Tannhäuser, W. began work on the 3-act romantic opera Lohengrin; even the book for Die Meistersinger, and tentative sketches for Der Ring des Nibelungen, were progressing at the same time. Early in 1848 Lohengrin was finished; but the direction of the Opera did not care to experiment with the work, and only the Finale to Act 1 was performed at the 300th anniversary of the court orchestra, on Sept. 22, 1848. Studies on the Barbarossa legend resulted in the curious essay Die Wibelungen, Weltgeschichte aus der Sage; W. does not appear to have approached the subject musically. A prose study on Der Nibelungen-Mythus als Entwurf zu einem Drama (1848) was followed by Siegfrieds Tod, a 3-act drama with Prologue, written in alliterative verse, and subsequently utilized, in an altered form, for Götterdämmerung; some of the musical themes were also conceived at this time. Full of these plans, and penetrated by the conviction of the impossibility of carrying them out under the existing theatrical conditions, Wagner drew up, and sent in to the Saxon Ministry, a 'Proposition for a National Theatre of the Kingdom of Saxony'; it remained unnoticed, and W., already chafing under secret and open hostility, and the irksome details incident to his position, incautiously expressed sympathy with the revolutionary tendencies of the period, and had to leave Dresden after the suppression of the May Revolution (1849), in order to escape arrest. For a brief space he found asylum at Weimar with Liszt, who was rehearsing Tannhäuser; but was again forced to flee, Liszt providing him with a passport and accompanying him as far as Eisenach on the way to Paris. This second visit to the French capital was quite barren of results, and in June, 1849, W. proceeded to Zurich. Here followed a period of literary activity. The exiled composer, finding his music slighted, now took up the pen to defend himself in earnest against the attacks of prejudice, malice, and ignorance, and to enlighten the public with regard to his own aims and motives. Within 3 years a remarkable series of essays appeared: Die Kunst und die Revolution (1849); Das Kunstwerk der Zukunft, Kunst und Klima, Das Judenthum in der Musik (1850); Oper und Drama; Eine Mittheilung an meine Freunde, Über die Goethe-Stiftung, Ein Theater in Zürich, Erinnerungen an Spontini (1851); Über die Aufführung des Tannhäuser, Bemerkungen zur Aufführung der Oper Der fliegende Holländer (1852). He also completed the 3-act prose drama Wieland der Schmiedt, hoping to bring it out in Paris as an opera in French verse; in 1852 the poems of the Nibelungen trilogy were finished, and privately printed in 1853; the full score of Das Rheingold was finished in 1854, and that of Die Walküre in 1856. In the meantime he conducted orchestral concerts, lectured on the musical drama, rehearsed and produced Tannhäuser at Zurich, 1855; in the spring of 1855 he likewise conducted eight concerts of the London Philharmonic Society. In 1857 he laid aside the half-finished score of Siegfried, and took up Tristan und Isolde, the poem being completed in that year, with the full score of Act I; the score of Act II was finished in Venice, March, 1859, and of Act III in Lucerne, August, 1859. He now gave concerts of his own works at Paris (1860), making many enthusiastic friends, but also stirring up active opposition, and incurring heavy debts. Two concerts in Brussels were even less successful. However, powerful interests in Paris were enlisted in his favor; the Emperor ordered that Tannhäuser should be put in rehearsal at the Grand Opéra; and it was brought out on March 13, 1861, though in the face of such tumultuous opposition by a hostile clique that it was withdrawn after the third performance. Upon this disaster followed a gleam of sunshine; W. was amnestied and returned to his native country in hopes of soon producing Tristan; the work was, indeed, received at the Vienna Court Opera, but given up as 'impracticable' after 57 rehearsals. He was partially consoled by hearing, for the first time, his own opera Lohengrin (Vienna, May 31, 1861); and he was greeted with effusion by Liszt and other leaders of German music at the Tonkünstler-Versammlung at Weimar in August. The design of a comic opera, Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg, sketched as far back as 1845, was now taken up with energy; he finished the poem at Paris, 1862, though the score was not completed until 1867. Up to 1864 he supported himself chiefly by giving concerts of his compositions, meeting with greatest success in Petrograd and Moscow. Despite all efforts, however, his situation became desperate; in 1863 he published the poems of the Nibelung cycle, having lost hope of finishing the musical setting. At this crisis King Ludwig II of Bavaria, who had just ascended the throne, sent for W. in 1864, inviting him to Munich with the promise of the amplest aid in carrying out his projects. Von Bülow was summoned as court Kapellmeister, to produce Tristan und Isolde (June 10, 1865). But court cabals, and persistent opposition on the part of leading musicians, rendered W.'s position so unpleasant that he left Munich in December, and settled in the village of Triebschen on the Lake of Lucerne, busying himself with the completion of the scores of Die Meistersinger (prod. Munich, June 21, 1868) and Der Ring des Nibelungen, Siegfried being finished in 1869, and Götterdämmerung in 1874. King Ludwig's plan for a special Wagner Theatre in Munich having fallen through, W. fixed upon Bayreuth, in 1871, as the place for it; the cornerstone was laid in 1872, on W.'s 59th birthday. The fund required for erecting the new theatre, which was built according to W.'s original plans, was raised by private subscription, by the contributions of 'Wagner Societies' (Wagner-Vereine) formed all over the world, and by a series of concerts arranged by W. in various German cities. At length, in August, 1876, the dream of his life was realized; three complete performances of the Der Ring des Nibelungen were given at the Bayreuth theatre, attended by musical notabilities from the four quarters of the globe, and honored by the presence of Emperor William I and King Ludwig. Hans Richter conducted the orchestra, in which Wilhelmj led the violins. Musically a grand success, the undertaking left W. again heavily involved in debt; concerts given at the Albert Hall, London, in 1877, gave meagre pecuniary returns; but he was finally relieved by the setting aside of the royalties derived from performances of the cycle at Munich. The next few years were occupied with literary work, and with the completion of his last dramatic composition, the 'Bühnenweihfestspiel' Parsifal, finished in 1882, and produced for the first time on July 26 of that year, other performances following through July and August, all under the master's personal supervision. He also made arrangements for the performances of 1883; in the autumn of 1882 ill health compelled him to seek relief in Venice, where he spent the winter; death overtook him suddenly on Feb. 13, 1883. His remains were interred in the garden of his villa 'Wahnfried' at Bayreuth.

In 1861 Wagner separated from his first wife, who went to Dresden, and died there Jan. 27, 1866. On Aug. 25, 1870, he married Cosima, the daughter of Liszt, after her divorce from her first husband, Hans von Bülow.

In comprehensiveness and grandeur of conception, originality and boldness of execution, vividness of characterization, intensity of expression and sustained power Wagner towers like a colossus above all other dramatic composers. From the outset he penned his own poems according to his own ideas. He wasted no time in searching for libretti from which to borrow ideas, or for a librettist to cast his ideas in the conventional mould. When he wrote a work, he was so filled with his subject that it was a natural necessity for him to put it into concrete shape, and so disburden his teeming imagination. His was a thoroughly poetic nature. And in true dramatic instinct he was so far in advance of his musical contemporaries, that many of them never could appreciate his preëminence. Of his first operas, Die Feen, Das Liebesverbot and Rienzi, it may be said briefly that they represent his immature, formative, imitative period. With Der fliegende Holländer the individual Wagner, the genius, is unveiled, almost abruptly. The plain, straightforward mythical tale, a conflict of stormy emotions and the apotheosis of love and self-sacrifice, appeals to every heart; the music, radiating from the central ballade sung by Senta, of an elementary power enhanced by the (already) original employment of leading-motives [Leitmotive], is as wildly romantic, as tenderly pathetic, and as sternly tragic, as the successive situations—and, above all, a music not written to exhibit the beauty and agility of the singers' voices, but to follow the drama into its least details without the customary breaks made by set numbers (arias, duets, ensembles); here the heroine has only one solo, the Ballade, and the hero none, in the customary sense. And all these innovations—the derivation of the dramatic and musical whole from a central source; the preservation of dramatico-musical unity by the use of Leitmotive; the subordination of the singers to dramatic requirements; and the absolute melodic and harmonic freshness and vigor, combined with daring orchestration—all these at once in one work! No wonder that there was a rattling of dry bones.—In Tannhäuser and Lohengrin (1848) Wagner's second period, the romantic, closes. In these two operas he employs like means, in substantially the same manner, though with growing variety and refinement.—The third period opens six years later, with Das Rheingold (1854). The intermediate time has been one of profound self-searching and reflection. W.'s ideas concerning the union of the arts have been fully matured and formulated (cf. Das Kunstwerk der Zukunft, Oper und Drama and Eine Mittheilung an meine Freunde); and in this period they are carried out to their ultimate logical conclusion. He assumes the rôle of a reformer of the musico-dramatic stage; unsparingly criticizes and condemns the faulty and illogical plan of the Italian 'opera' and the French 'grand opera,' and naturally discards these titles, calling his own subsequent works 'music-dramas,' adding specific titles ('Handlung' [action] for Tristan und Isolde; 'Bühnenfestspiel' [stage festival-play] for the Nibelungen; 'Bühnenweihfestspiel' [stage-consecrating festival-play] for Parsifal). To quote his own words, "the mistake in the art-form of the opera consists in this, that a means of expression (music) was made the end, and the end to be expressed (the drama) was made a means." Only in a coördinated coöperation of musical and scenic means of expression with the end to be expressed, the dramatic action, could a genuine and perfect musical drama be achieved. The choice of subject is of the utmost importance, for not all subjects lend themselves to musical characterization. The study of his own sketches, Friedrich der Rothbart and Siegfrieds Tod (both written in 1848) convinced him that the former (historical) was absolutely complete as a spoken drama, whereas the latter (legendary) imperatively demanded the aid of music. This conviction he formulated thus: "The subject to be treated by the word-tone poet (Worttondichter) is the purely human, freed from all convention and from everything historically formal." The new art-work also begot its own artistic form: continuous thematic development of leading-motives. Wagner's orchestra now became an exponent of the dramatic action; the highly individualized and pregnant leading-motives, now singly, in bold relief, now subtly intertwined and varied, plastically present the ever-changing soul-states of the characters of the drama and form the connecting-links for the dramatic situations; the singing of the actors is resolved into a lofty declamation ('Sprechsingen,' Wagner calls it) of telling dramatic force. In richness, variety, and novelty of effect, W.'s theatre-orchestra stands unrivalled; in chromatic and enharmonic modulation, rhythmic multiformity, and fertility and originality of contrapuntal combination and thematic exploitation, he is wholly sui generis. Tristan und Isolde, Die Meistersinger, Der Ring des Nibelungen and Parsifal differ widely in their subjects, and consequently in the character of their music, each presenting a distinctive physiognomy; but all exhibit those striking characteristics which are immediately recognized as typically Wagnerian. Whatever one's personal preference for one or the other of these works, one always has the feeling that the music of each drama is the perfect and only possible expression of that particular subject. All represent an elevation of sustained dramatic energy undreamed of before the advent of Wagner, and not attained since.

Wagner's reform was incomparably more far-reaching in aim, import and effect, than Gluck's. The latter's chief purpose was to counteract the arbitrary predominance of the singers, and this he tried to accomplish through insistence upon the drama and dramatic truth. But he failed to recognize the fact that the very form of the opera with its set numbers (arias, recitatives, ensembles, etc.), each musically complete in itself and not connected one with the other, was directly antagonistic to the very principle he sought to emphasize. Less than half a century after his death the abuses he had temporarily remedied flourished more than ever in the operas of Rossini, Bellini, Donizetti and Meyerbeer. Wagner struck at the root of the evil. When he turned away from opera, he did so with the conviction that this artifical form could never serve as a basis for true dramatic expression. In its place he has given the world a new form, the music-drama, founded on the dramatic side upon the drama of Shakespeare and Schiller, and on the musical side upon the art of Bach and Beethoven. So entirely new was Wagner's art, that, with a few exceptions, contemporaries failed to comprehend it, and W. was obliged to train singers and conductors in the new style of interpretation demanded by his works. Thus he became the founder of interpretative conducting and of a new school of dramatic singing.—As time passes, the figure of Wagner seems to assume more colossal proportions. He is one of those master-minds that belong to no time and to no nation, whose work lives as one of the vital forces of civilization.

Out of the extensive collection of Nikolaus Oesterlein (q. v.), who devoted his life to the acquisition of Wagneriana of every description, there has grown the Wagner-Museum, opened at Vienna in 1887. In 1897 it was transferred to Eisenach, where, pending the erection of a building on a magnificent scale, the treasures are housed in the villa formerly occupied by Fritz Reuter. The collections are being constantly increased, special attention being given to the enormous W.-library, which contains practically everything written about W. The directors are N. Oesterlein (1887–98), Hans Buhmann (1898–1904), Philipp Kühnert (since 1904).—See BIBLIOGRAPHY, under M and N.

WORKS.

WRITINGS.—Wagner spent a large amount of his enormous productive activity in writing. Besides the dramatic works he set to music, he wrote the texts of a 2-act comic opera, Männerlist grösser als Frauenlist, oder Die glückliche Bärenfamilie (1837), a 4-act tragic opera, Die hohe Braut, oder Bianca und Giuseppe (first sketch, 1836; completed 1842; comp. by J. F. Kittl, and prod. Prague, 1848) and a 3-act 'grosse Heldenoper' Siegfrieds Tod (1848; later expanded into Götterdämmerung); a 2-act comedy in ancient style, Eine Kapitulation (1871); dramatic sketches, Die Bergwerke zu Falun (1841), Die Sarazenin (1841), Friedrich der Rothbart (1846; enlarged 1848), Jesus von Nazareth (1848), Wieland der Schmiedt (1856), Die Sieger (1856). He expounded his theories on music and the music-drama in several works, the more important of which are Die Kunst und die Revolution (1849), Das Kunstwerk der Zukunft (1850), Kunst und Klima (1850), Oper und Drama (1851), Eine Mittheilung an meine Freunde (1851), Über das Dirigieren (1869), Beethoven (1870). In his later years he also touched upon a large number of religious, social and economic subjects in essays of more or less value. The merits of his dramatic poems aroused only less dispute than his music; but to-day his name is found in every history of German literature as one of the great German dramatic poets. The first edition of his collected writings, edited by himself, was publ. at Leipzig in 9 vols. (1871–3) as Gesammelte Schriften und Dichtungen; it contains the dramatic works from Rienzi to Der Ring des Nibelungen, the above-mentioned essays, besides numerous others written between 1840–71. The second ed. (1882–3), with an additional vol. (Parsifal and essays), was also prepared by W. personally; the 3d (1887) and 4th (1897) editions are only reprints. Not contained in these editions, and publ. separately, are: Entwürfe, Gedanken, Fragmente (ed. by H. von Wolzogen; Leipzig, 1885); Jesus von Nazareth (ib., 1887); Nachgelassene Schriften und Dichtungen (ib., 1895; 2d ed. 1902); Gedichte (ed. by K. F. Glasenapp; Berlin, 1905); Entwürfe zu ‚Die Meistersinger,' ‚Tristan und Isolde' und ‚Parsifal' (ed. by H. von Wolzogen; Leipzig, 1907); essays and criticisms of the first Paris period ed. by R. Sternfeld as Aus R. W.'s Pariser Zeit (Berlin, 1907); the texts of Die Feen, Die hohe Braut, Das Liebesmahl der Apostel, a fragment of Die Hochzeit, the sketch to Die Bergwerke zu Falun, and early essays ed. by J. Kapp as Der junge W. (Berlin, 1910). All these works were included in the 5th edition, ed. by H. von Wolzogen and R. Sternfeld (12 vols.; Leipzig, 1911). Engl. transl. by W. A. Ellis, The Prose Works of R. W. (8 vols.; London, 1892–1900); French tr. by J.-G. Prod'homme, F. Caillé and L. van Vassenhove, Œuvres en Prose de R. W. (9 vols.; Paris, 1907–13).—A detailed autobiography, Mein Leben (only up to May, 1864) was privately printed (15 copies, 1870) for distribution among intimate friends; publ. in 2 vols. at Munich, 1911 (simultaneously in Engl., Fr. and Russian).—Very valuable and important is W.'s voluminous published correspondence. After his death the business passed to his five sons, Heinrich [b. Oct. 10, 1828; d. Kirchheim, Nov. 24, 1903], Friedrich [b. Sept. 17, 1829; d. Dec. 6, 1895], Karl [b. Mar. 6, 1845; d. Stuttgart, May 19, 1908], Paul [b. May 31, 1846], and Eberhard [b. April 8, 1850]. The two surviving sons are the present (1918) heads of the firm. W. was an excellent amateur musician; B. wrote a set of vars. in C for pf. 4 hands on a theme of W.'s (publ. 1794), and later (1805) dedicated to him the great sonata in C, op. 53. We'ber [vā'ber], Carl Maria (Friedrich Ernst), Freiherr von, the founder of the German Romantic school; born Eutin, Oldenburg, Dec. 18, 1786; d. London, June 5, 1826. His father, Franz Anton von Weber (1734–1812), formerly an army-officer, had taken up the profession of music when about 40, and at the time of Carl Maria's birth was cond. of the Eutin town-orch.; he came of a musical family, and it was his darling ambition that one of his children should become a great musician like Mozart, the husband of his niece Constanze Weber (Carl Maria was Mozart's first cousin by marriage). His mother was a dramatic singer of talent. The year after his birth, his father left Eutin as the director of a travelling dramatic troupe; and for years the family led a wandering life, during which the boy obtained that insight into the technicalities of the stage which so conspicuously aided him in his dramatic career. W.'s first teacher was his stepbrother Fritz, a pupil of Jos. Haydn; under his instruction progress was slow. At Hildburghausen, in 1796, W. received thorough instruction on the piano from J. P. Heuschkel, and here laid the foundation for his future virtuosity. As a chorister in the cathedral at Salzburg in 1797, he attracted Michael Haydn's attention, from whom he had gratuitous lessons in composition for some months, and to whom he dedicated his first published compositions, six fughettas (1798). At Munich (1798–1800) he was taught singing by Valesi, and made excellent progress in composition under Kalcher, later court organist, writing his first opera, Die Macht der Liebe und des Weins, in 1799 (never perf.; the MS., with other early works, was burned by accident or design). He also appeared as a concert-pianist. Here, too, he fell in with Aloys Senefelder, the inventor of lithography; this invention interested W. deeply, so that he gave much time and thought to its improvement, worked at it practically (he engraved his op. 2, variations f. pf., himself in 1800), and (apparently) so improved the process that his father removed to Freiberg in Saxony in 1800 for the purpose of exploiting the new ideas. Here W.'s zeal for dramatic composition was reawakened by the libretto of Das Waldmädchen; the opera had fair success at Freiberg (Nov. 24, 1800), and much better fortune at Chemnitz, Prague, Vienna, and Petrograd; meantime the lithographic venture failed, and in 1801 they were all in Salzburg again, where W. studied further under M. Haydn, and composed a third opera, Peter Schmoll und seine Nachbarn (Augsburg, Mar., 1803). In 1802 they were in Hamburg; in Nov. going to Augsburg, and thence to Vienna early in 1803, where W. made a serious study of the works of the great masters under the guidance of Abbé Vogler. In 1804 the latter recommended W. for the post of Kapellm. of the Breslau City Th. He resigned early in 1806, supported himself for some months by music-lessons, and was then Music-Intendent to Duke Eugen of Württemberg at Schloss Karlsruhe, Silesia, till Feb., 1807, when he became private secretary to Duke Ludwig at Stuttgart, and music-master to his children. He remained here until his banishment by royal edict in 1810, after spending two weeks in prison on the charge of having practised a deception of which he was proved innocent. The preparations for bringing out his grand opera Silvana were nearing completion at the time, and were, of course, abandoned; W. repaired to Mannheim, meeting Gottfried Weber, and bringing out his first symphony; he then rejoined his old teacher, Abbé Vogler, at Darmstadt. Silvana was given at Frankfort-on-Main, Sept. 16, 1810, and Abu Hassan, a comic one-act Singspiel, at Munich, June 4, 1811. In February of that year W. had left Darmstadt, making a concert-tour through Frankfort, Würzburg, Nuremberg, etc., to Munich, where he stayed 5 months. In 1812 Silvana was staged at Berlin, with additional numbers. After short stays here, in Leipzig, Weimar, and Gotha, he was appointed (1813) Kapellm. of the National ('Landständisches') Theatre at Prague; went to Vienna to engage a company (among the singers was Caroline Brandt, his future wife), thoroughly reorganized the opera, and became a conductor of such mark that in 1816 the King of Saxony called him to Dresden to reorganize the Royal Opera. His conductor's début in this new position was on Jan. 14, 1817. A few weeks later he suggested to Friedrich Kind (a lawyer, but then living as a writer in Dresden) the idea of writing him a libretto; they fixed on Apel's novel, Der Freischütz, and on Mar. 1 Kind handed the finished libretto to W. The composition of this work occupied 3 years, the overture being finished in May, 1820; directly after, he wrote the music to Preciosa in 3 weeks, and also began work on a comic opera, Die drei Pintos. Although well known as a conductor, a finished pianist, and a song-composer (his settings of Körner's Leyer und Schwert had won him the hearts of the students), he had not yet attained to national renown. But with the tremendous success of Der Freischütz at Berlin, June 18, 1821 (New York, Mar. 3, 1825), a triumph emphasized by the contrast of that opera with the French and Italian works then dominating the German stage, he became a sort of national hero; everywhere in Germany Der Freischütz won triumph on triumph, culminating in a grand ovation to the composer at Vienna. It was followed by Euryanthe, which, produced at the Kärnthnerthor Theatre, Vienna, on Oct. 25, 1823 (New York, Dec. 23, 1887; in Ital. c. 1863) was by no means equally successful there, in rivalry with Rossini, though warmly received at Berlin and elsewhere. For some years W.'s health had been gradually declining; in 1824 he was obliged to take a vacation at Marienbad, and in January, 1825, had recovered sufficiently to begin the composition of Oberon, a new opera which Kemble had commissioned him to write for Covent Garden, London. But his illness, consumption, interrupted the progress of the work; he was obliged to go to Ems for treatment, after which he recommenced his work, finishing the score in London, where Oberon was brought out on April 12, 1826 (New York, Oct. 9, 1829). Worn out by the overexertion incident to rehearsals, concert-giving and social life, he passed away only eight weeks afterward. His remains were removed to Dresden, Dec. 15, 1844. On that occasion Richard Wagner delivered an oration and conducted a funeral march on motives from Euryanthe and a funeral ode (original) for double chorus. A statue to his memory, by Rietschel, was unveiled in 1860.

Weber's fame as a dramatic composer still shines undimmed in his two masterworks, Der Freischütz and Euryanthe. In subject and conception essentially German, the vivid melodic originality, sustained dramatic vigor, and tender lyrical charm of W.'s music have invested them with a poetic glamour fittingly styled 'romantic.' His piano-works have been unduly neglected. He was a player and composer of fascinating originality. As an executant, his large hands gave him an unusual command of the keyboard (he could stretch a twelfth), which he improved for novel and striking effects in chords and passage-work. He wrote for the piano as a pianist, thoroughly conversant with the nature and resources of the instrument; in these pieces he is not only the first 'romanticist,' but also distinctly foreshadows the later 'orchestral' school. His influence on the development of German music, through men like Schumann, Marschner and Wagner, cannot be adequately expressed in a few lines.

Having graduated as winner of the Mozart prize, he went to Liszt, upon whose recommendation his first opera, Sakuntala, was prod. at Weimar (1884). concerts in Berlin; extended tours with the orch. established his fame as one of the world's foremost conductors; at the same time he won a reputation as an unsurpassed ensemble-player, when he visited the principal German cities with the W. They are lacking, it must be admitted, in real inspiration and compelling utterance; nevertheless, they represent the finely-wrought expression of an impressive personality. W.'s orchl. works, unquestionably, establish W.'s place among the masters of instrumentation.—

At the age of 8 he entered Clavel's class in the Paris Cons., and the advanced class of Massart in 1845, winning 1st prize for violin-playing in 1846. He gave his first concerts at Petrograd and Moscow in 1848, and from 1849–50 studied harmony at the Paris Cons. under Colet. He then began a series of concert-tours with his brother Joseph, the pianist, through Poland, Russia, Germany, Scandinavia, Belgium, Holland, England, etc.; in 1860 he was named solo violinist to the Czar, living chiefly in Petrograd until 1872, and teaching at the Cons. there 1862–7. With Anton Rubinstein he toured the United States in 1872, then extending his travels alone to California; in 1874 he succeeded Vieuxtemps as prof. of violin-playing at the Brussels Cons., resigning in 1877, and continuing his tours, with rapidly failing health, until death. Among modern violinists W. is one of the most imposing figures. Technical difficulties did not exist for him; his magnificent, large tone, coupled with boldness of execution and a fiery, at times volcanic, temperament carried away his listeners. He was equally great as an ensemble-player. His compositions are well written, brilliant and very effective, and several (the concertos, the Legend, the 2d mazourka, etc.) are still in the répertoire of every violinist.—Works: For vl. and orch., op. 4, Polonaise in D; op. 6, Souvenir de Moscou; op. 14, Concerto No. 1 in F♯ m.; op. 16, Scherzo-Tarentelle; op. 17, Légende; op. 19, Deux Mazourkas caractéristiques; op. 20, Fantaisie brillante (on themes from Faust); op. 21, Polonaise brillante; op. 22, Concerto No. 2 in D m. For vl. solo, op. 10, Étude-Caprice; op. 18, Études-Caprices (with a 2d vl.). With his brother Joseph he wrote Allegro de sonate (op. 2) and Grand Duo polonais (op. 5).

In 1866 he settled in Moscow as a teacher at the Cons.; but soon established a pf.-school of his own, which flourished. 1875–6 he was dir. of the Warsaw Music Soc., and then settled in Brussels, teaching at the Cons. On very numerous concert-tours throughout Europe, he won fame rivalling that of his gifted brother.—Works: Suite romantique f. orch. op. 41; Guillaume le Taciturne, overture, op. 43; pf.-concerto in G m., op. 20; string-quartet in A m., op. 32; pf.-trio in G, op. 40; Grand Duo polonais f. pf. and violin, op. 5 (with his brother); sonata in D m., op. 24; sonata f. pf. and 'cello in E, op. 26; Fantasia f. 2 pfs., op. 42. He taught music in the military school of Saint-Cyr; and in 1810 was app. teacher of music at the Lycée Napoléon (later Collège de Henri IV), occupying this position until death. The system of enseignement mutuel (mutual instruction) which had been introduced into the popular schools of France, attracted W.'s attention, and in 1815 he began to apply it in mus. teaching, with such marked success, that in 1819 he was chosen to organize a system of mus. instruction for the primary schools in Paris, was app. singing-teacher to the Polytechnique in 1820, and likewise Director of a Normal School of Music. In 1830 ten elementary schools were under his supervision; in 1833 he conceived the happy idea of instituting regular reunions of the pupils in one grand chorus, to which he gave the name of 'Orphéon,' the performances of which were marked by wonderful confidence, precision and animation. In 1835 he was made Director-General of mus. instruction in all primary schools of Paris, and was created a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. Besides his school-classes, he formed classes of adults, chiefly workingmen, in which the success of his system was equally conspicuous, and which now, under the name of 'Orphéons,' include scores of popular singing-societies. He publ. numerous songs and choruses; also a great coll. of a cappella choruses, 'Orphéon,' in 5 (later 10) vols. From 1835–42 he was articled to John Gray (later Gray & Davidson), and even during his apprenticeship he invented the special manual and pedal couplers which he later used in his own instruments; worked from 1842–5 for Evans at Cheltenham, and in 1845 establ. his own business in London. His rebuilding of the organ in Gloucester Cath. proved the stepping-stone to his subsequent fame; the instrument exhibited at the Crystal Palace during the Exhib. of 1851 attracted wide attention, won the Council Medal, and was installed in Winchester Cath. in 1853; it also brought him the commission for the great organ in St. George's Hall, Liverpool (1855). In 1878 he took his sons Vincent and Henry into partnership, and adopted the firm name of 'Henry Willis & Sons'; he became generally known as 'Father W.' Vincent left the firm in 1894, but Henry became the head of the business after the founder's death, and later took his own son, Henry Jr., into partnership. W. won prizes at all the great expositions in England and France, and the organs of almost half the cathedrals in England were built or rebuilt by him; he himself regarded the magnificent organ in St. Paul's, London (1891), as his masterpiece (77 speaking stops, 19 couplers); his successors built the organ in Liverpool Cath. (167 speaking stops, 48 couplers) in 1912–4 (at the time the largest in the world).—Although W. was entirely self-taught in music, he became a remarkably fine organist; before his 20th year played at Christ Ch., Hoxton; then went to Hampstead Parish Ch., and for nearly 30 years was org. at the Chapel of Ease, Islington. At the Gloucester Fest. of 1847, and on several other occasions, he played double-bass in the orch. —Cf. 'M. T.' (May, 1898).

Wolf, Hugo, one of the immortal masters of song; b. Windischgräz, Styria, Mar. 13, 1860; d. Vienna, Feb. 22, 1903. He received his first instruction on the piano and violin from his father and a local teacher, Weixler, and soon was able to play 2d vl. in his father's amateur string-quartet. Having overcome parental opposition, he ent. the Vienna Cons. in 1875, studying pf. with W. Schenner and harm. with F. Krenn; a breach of discipline led to his expulsion in 1877. W. was now thrown upon his own resources, and eked out a scanty living as teacher of pf. and vl., but continued his musical education by earnest study of the scores of Bach, Beethoven and Wagner. In the autumn of 1881 he secured an appointment as 2d cond. and Repetitor at the opera in Salzburg (Muck was 1st cond.), but found the work so uncongenial that he returned to Vienna in Jan., 1882. From 1884–7 he was music critic of the 'Salonblatt,' a position for which he was temperamentally unfitted. Of the honesty of his convictions there can be no doubt; but his powerful artistic individuality prevented his viewing the work of contemporaries from a dispassionate, objective standpoint; through his violent attacks on Brahms, in particular, he made influential enemies (Hans Richter, Hanslick, Kalbeck, etc.), who effectively retarded the appreciation of his genius. His compositions, however, won him a few devoted friends, whose material assistance enabled him to resign his post as critic and to devote himself thenceforward entirely to creative work. They also assumed the expense of the publication (by E. Wetzler, Vienna, 1888) of the first two books of his songs (I. Morgentau, Die Spinnerin, Das Vöglein, Mausfallensprüchlein, Wiegenlied im Sommer, Wiegenlied im Winter; II. Zur Ruh, Der König bei der Krönung, Biterolf, Wächterlied auf der Wartburg, Wanderers Nachtlied, Beherzigung). Through the brothers Joseph and Franz Schalk the Vienna Wagner-Verein took up W.'s cause, and created considerable excitement by devoting an entire concert to Beethoven and Wolf (Dec. 11, 1888); despite adverse criticism it persisted in its propaganda for the new composer, whose fame, after the appearance of the Mörike (1889) and Goethe (1890) cycles, spread slowly, but steadily. During his brief conductorship at Salzburg W. became fired with the ambition of writing an opera, but rejected libretto after libretto, until in 1895 he found what he required in Rosa Mayreder's Der Corregidor (after Alarcón's El Sombrero de Tres Picos); with feverish enthusiasm he threw himself into his work, completing the score in December, firmly convinced that he had surpassed his great song-cycles (all finished at the time, except vol. ii of the Italienisches Liederbuch). At its première in Mannheim (June 7, 1896) the opera won but moderate success, and the original verdict has not been modified by later performances elsewhere. Yet the score is not only a masterpiece of contrapuntal skill, but full of exquisite, inspired music; it lacks dramatic effectiveness because its author was not gifted with that specific quality termed 'stage-craft.' As a dramatic composer W. shares the fate of his great predecessors Schubert and Schumann. Nevertheless, Mahler, then the all-powerful director of the Vienna court opera, had become interested in W. and was contemplating the production of the opera. Full of high hopes the composer began work on a second opera, Manuel Venegas, and had proceeded as far as scene 5 of the first act, when ruthless fate cut short his career at the height of his powers. For some time his friends had noticed his nervous and eccentric state, but attributed it to overwork. On Sept. 19, 1897, the long slumbering demon of insanity broke loose. At Dr. Svetlin's private asylum the disease seemed to yield to treatment, so that after a few weeks W. was able to occupy himself with the instrumentation of some of his songs, and on Jan. 24, 1898, he was discharged. After a short trip through Italy with his sister he returned in March to Vienna; in May he removed to Traunkirchen. On a chilly October day he suddenly threw himself into the lake, but was rescued and transferred to the Vienna asylum for the insane. There he lingered until Feb. 22, 1903. He was laid to rest in the Zentralfriedhof at Vienna, near the graves of Schubert, Beethoven and Brahms; there a magnificent monument, by Edmund Hellmer, was unveiled on Oct. 20, 1904.—In 1896 Paul Müller established the first 'Hugo Wolf-Verein' in Berlin, which did excellent work in spreading a knowledge of the master's works. More important is the Vienna 'H. W.-Verein,' founded April 22, 1897, by Michael Haberlandt, primarily for the same object; during the composer's last illness it paid part of his expenses (the Emperor contributing annually 1200 Kronen [$300]) and publ. his criticisms, correspondence and posth. comps. deemed worthy of publication. Having accomplished its purpose, and seeing W.'s fame securely established, it was dissolved in 1906. Its inventory was distributed as follows: 41 original MSS. to the R. Library; 144 pictures and photographs, the death-mask, the piano and 73 articles of personal use to the Munic. Museum; all unpubl. MSS. (mostly fragments), its archives and library to the Vienna Wagner-Verein.

W. began to compose even before he ent. the Cons., but did not immediately discover his special field. In 1888 his genius suddenly burst forth with volcanic force; from Feb. to May he wrote 43 of the Mörike songs (sometimes 3 in one day); then came a period of stagnation; in Sept. a renewed outburst produced the greater number of the Eichendorff songs, the other 10 Mörike songs and the entire Goethe cycle. Such periods of highest inspiration and feverish activity, followed by others of absolute sterility and deep despair, were characteristic of his entire career; more than once he expressed the fear that his genius had left him forever. Upon his songs (260 publ.) rests his title to immortality. More completely than any one of his predecessors has W. identified himself with the poet; so close is the relation between words and music that both seem the product of a single mind. This penetration to the very heart of the poem invests his music with the character of inevitable necessity, transforms the hidden meaning of the poet into living tone, almost visualizes the mood or situation. He combines all the chief excellences of his predecessors: the universality and spontaneity of Schubert, the symphonic richness and romantic tenderness of Schumann, the polyphonic depth of Franz, the architectonic breadth of Brahms. "The range of his expression is no less remarkable than the intensity of it. To think of his songs one by one is to see defiling before the eye a veritable pageant of humanity in epitome, a long procession of forms of the utmost variety, all drawn to the very life—lovers and maidens in every phase of passion and despair, poets, rogues, humorists, philosophers, hunters, sailors, kings, lovable good-for-nothings, Hedonists, Stoics, religious believers of every shade of confident ecstatic faith or torturing doubt. They are set in every conceivable form of environment; the whole panorama of nature is unrolled before us—flowers, mountains, clouds, the sunset, the dawn, the dead of night, the salt open sea and the haunted inland waters,—together with everything in nature that has voice or movement—the elves, the birds, the wind, the fire." [NEWMAN.] In vividness of characterization and power of expression Wolf approaches Wagner more nearly than perhaps any other composer. His originality is so pronounced that he could safely indulge his intensive study of Wagner's scores; in fact, his thorough assimilation of the older master's art seems to have stimulated and strengthened this originality. His style is individual and unmistakable. All his song-cycles present his general characteristics; but a closer study brings out the fact that each cycle has a physiognomy distinct from every other. His complete identification with the poet naturally produces such modifications as correspond to the individuality of the different poets. In the Goethe cycle it seems to be Goethe, turned musician, who writes his own music; similarly with Mörike, Eichendorff, etc. A comparison with the still more incisive differentiation of style in the works of Wagner almost obtrudes itself. Such obvious parallels (and they are numerous) have led to a superficial and entirely misleading estimate of Wolf as the 'Wagner of Song.' Such parallelism, which touches only the surface of things, is bound to result when two masters proceed from the identical principle: to make their music the perfect expression of the poetical idea. Furthermore, no such gulf as separates Wagner from all other dramatic composers, separates Wolf from the other masters of song, nor did he create a new art. Schubert, Schumann, Franz, Brahms and Wolf, considered specifically as song-writers, stand practically on the same level. Schubert is the creator of the art-song; each of his successors has added something of his own. Wolf, coming last, availed himself of all previous achievement, and brought to glorious consummation a natural process of gradual evolution.

Wolf-Ferrari, Ermanno, b. Venice, Jan. 12, 1876. [His father is the famous German painter August W. (b. 1842); his mother's name was Ferrari.] Until 1893 self-taught; then st. under Rheinberger in Munich (1893–5); 1902–9, dir. of the Liceo Benedetto Marcello in Venice; since then living in Munich as composer. In his Donne curiose, Segreto di Susanna and Amore Medico he has enriched the stage with veritable masterpieces of 'opera buffa'; these scores show not only admirable workmanship, but fine melodic invention and delicate characterization; his economy of means is surprising, for he employs only the small orchestra of Mozart, and the same sense of artistic moderation is exhibited in his chamber-music. I Giojelli della Madonna, in which he rivals in brutality and inartistic excesses the Italian veristic school, stands as an anomaly among his other works. The Amer. première of this opera was prepared under his personal supervision.—Works [all Amer. premières in Italian]: The operas Cenerentola (Venice, Feb. 22, 1900; as Aschenbrödel, Bremen, Jan. 31, 1902); Le Donne curiose (Die neugierigen Frauen, Munich, Nov. 27, 1903; M. O. H., Mar. 25, 1914). Op. 2, La Sulamite, bibl. cantata for soli, ch. and orch. (Venice, Feb. 26, 1899); op. 3, *Talitta Kumi. Wölfl [Wölffl, Woelfl], Joseph, famous pianist; b. Salzburg, 1772; d. London, May 21, 1812. A pupil in pf.-playing and composition of L. Mozart and M. Haydn, he appeared as a concert-player in Warsaw, 1792–4, but left Poland in the throes of revolution, and settled in Vienna. He had moderate success as a stage-composer, bringing out 3 light pieces, Der Höllenberg (1795), Das schöne Milchmädchen (1797) and Der Kopf ohne Mann (1798); as a pianist, on the other hand, he held his own in rivalry with Beethoven, aided by his enormous hands and great contrapuntal skill; the relations between the two rivals were friendly. In 1798 he set out on a long tour, playing in Brünn, Prague, Leipzig, Dresden, Berlin and Hamburg (1799); he was again in Leipzig (Oct., 1800), and Berlin (Dec.); in 1801 he journeyed to Paris, where his success as a pianist was immense. He made that city his home until 1805; prod. an opera, l'Amour romanesque, at the Théâtre Feydeau (1804) with applause, but failed next year with the 3-act heroic opera Fernando, ou les Maures, and soon after repaired to London. At his first concert, on May 27, 1805, he produced a pf.-concerto and a symphony of his own composition, and played other concertos on June 1 and June 5. He was received with the greatest applause; and everything shows that he retained his popularity throughout his 7 years' residence in London. Two ballets by him were prod. at the King's Th., La Surprise de Diane (Dec. 21, 1805), and Alzire (Jan. 27, 1807), both with considerable success. His compositions were regularly advertised on concert-programs as special attractions; as late as May 16, 1812, a new concerto was played at a Salomon Concert by Richard Cudmore, one of W.'s pupils. His most eminent English pupil was Cipriani Potter. Of his stage-pieces, the comic opera Liebe macht kurzen Process, oder Die Heirath auf gewisse Art (Vienna, 1801?; W. wrote 7 of the 15 mus. numbers) still remains to be mentioned. An extremely prolific composer, he publ. 69 works with opus-numbers, and many others (chiefly f. pf.) without. Though very fashionable at the time in Vienna, Paris and London, few of his pf.-pieces are now known. The best of the 7 concertos are the Concerto militaire, op. 43, and Le Calme, which created a sensation at London in 1806. The grand sonatas Non plus ultra, op. 41, and Le diable à quatre, op. 50, likewise deserve mention. Other published comps. are 2 symphonies, 9 string-quartets, a dozen pf.-trios, 2 trios f. 2 clars. and bassoon, many violin-sonatas, a flute-sonata, a 'cello-sonata, about 40 pf.-sonatas, duos with violin, a duo f. 2 pfs., a Méthode de piano (with 100 studies, op. 56), 24 preludes f. pf., sonatas f. 4 hands, waltzes, Polaccas, Polonaises, rondos, fantasias, variations, etc., f. pf.; other instrl. pieces, songs, etc.—See Q.-Lex.

In 1905 he was called to fill the newly created chair of music in the Univ. of California, also cond. the symphony concerts in the Greek Th. at Berkeley, and was organist of the First Congr. Ch. (1907–9); resigned in 1911, returning to Bethlehem as org. of the Salem Lutheran Ch.; since 1914 also cond. of the Harrisburg Choral Soc. and the York Oratorio Soc.; founded, besides, the Lancaster Oratorio Soc. in 1916. He gave recitals at the World's Fair (Chicago, 1893) and the St. Louis Expos. (1904). In 1904 he was made Mus. Doc. by the Moravian Coll. and Theol. Sem. An excellent organist, it is as a choral cond., especially of Bach's works, that he has won international reputation. In 1882 he organized the Choral Union, which from 1885 devoted itself exclusively to Bach; it attracted wide attention by a masterly production of the St. John Passion, given for the first time in America in its entirety on June 5, 1888; the society's first performance of the St. Matthew Passion in 1892 was not, as frequently stated, the première complete perf. in America. [That honor belongs to the Boston Handel and Haydn Soc., April 11, 1879.] The difficulties of the Mass in B minor and W.'s inflexible determination to produce that work, and no other, led to the dissolution of the Choral Union in 1892. He then began to train his Moravian church-choir, with which as a nucleus he organized on Dec. 5, 1898, the now famous 'Bach Choir' (then 80 voices; now [1918] 254). After 14 months of constant rehearsing he gave at the opening concert, on Mar. 27, 1900, a model performance of the great Mass (first complete Amer. perf.). The next year a 3-day festival was given, when at the first concert (May 23) the Christmas Oratorio had its first complete perf. in America. The fest. of 1903 lasted an entire week; in 1904–5 three 3-day cycles (Christmas, Lenten, Easter) were given in Dec., April and June. With W.'s departure for California these festivals came to an end, but were resumed immediately after his return. Since 1912 the festivals have been held in Packer Memorial Ch., Lehigh Univ., have been limited to 2 days (the second invariably devoted to the B m. Mass), and the orchestra, which before then consisted mainly of amateur players, has been recruited from the members of the Philadelphia Symph. Orch. The choir was heard for the first time in New York in a special Bach-Beethoven concert of the N. Y. Philh. Soc. (Jan. 20, 1917); its emphatic success led to a reëngagement for a special Bach-Wagner concert (Jan. 26, 1918). At the various festivals W. gave the Amer. premières of some 20 of Bach's church-cantatas.—While in Berkeley, he organized a Bach Choir of 125 voices, with which he prod. the Mass in B m. (1909) and the St. Matthew Passion (1910).—Cf. R. Walters, The Bethlehem Bach Choir (Boston, 1918).

Wood, Sir Henry J., b. London, Mar. 3, 1870. Of musical parentage, at the age of six he played the piano-part, in family musicales, in works by Bach and Haydn; equally precocious on the organ, at ten he often acted as deputy organist, and his organ-recitals were a feature of the Fisheries' Exhib. (1883) and the Inventions' Exhib. (1885). He studied 6 terms in the R. A. M. (from 1886) under Prout, Steggall, Macfarren and Garcia, winning four medals. About 1888 programs began to bear his name as a song-composer; he next tried his hand at light operas, cantatas and oratorio, and several works came out. But his darling ambition was to become a professional conductor; his first practical experience was a 4-months' trip with the Rousbey company, beginning Sept., 1889; next autumn he superintended the rehearsals of Ivanhoe (Sullivan), and then became Cellier's assistant at the Savoy Th., likewise conducting Mignon and Le Médecin malgré lui at the Crystal Palace. In August, 1891, he conducted Carmen during Mme. Rôze's tour; in 1892, at the Olympic, Eugene Oniegin, etc. He now devoted much time to opera-classes and singing-lessons. On Oct. 6, 1895, he began the first series of Promenade concerts in Queen's Hall with an orchestra of nearly 100 picked men. Their success encouraged Mr. Newman, the manager, to undertake a series of Saturday afternoon Symphony concerts (the first on Jan. 30, 1897), which also flourished from the beginning. The same year W. became cond. of the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Soc., in 1900 of the Wolverhampton Festival Choral Soc., in 1902 of the Sheffield Fest., and in 1908 of the Norwich Fest. He now competed with Lamoureux, Chevillard, Colonne, Ysaÿe, Weingartner and Nikisch as visiting conductors. W. himself has visited Paris, Berlin, and (1904) New York. After Muck's resignation the conductorship of the Boston Symph. Orch. was offered him (1918), but he declined. At the beginning of his career as a cond. of symphonic music his predilections were distinctly modern, but gradually his sympathies broadened and his programs showed more catholicity of taste, so that to-day he is one of the world's great conductors. In 1898 he married his pupil Olga Narishkin, who as Mrs. W. became a distinguished concert-singer. She died in London, Dec. 20, 1909. In 1911 W. was knighted.—Cf. R. Newmarch, H. J. W. (London, 1904; in the series 'Living Masters of Music').

Wüll'ner, Dr. Ludwig, son of preceding; eminent Lieder-singer; b. Münster, Westphalia, Aug. 19, 1858. St. Germanic languages and lore at the univs. of Munich, Berlin and Strassburg and took the degree of Dr. phil.; from 1884–7 he was Privatdozent of Germanic philology at the Akademie in Münster, and sang much in private and also in concert, though strict musical training began only with his course of study at the Cologne Cons. (1887–9); for a short time he also taught there and cond. a church-choir. A second change of vocation brought him to the Meinigen Hoftheater, where he appeared with much success as an actor of heroic parts in the spoken drama (1889–95). Here Brahms was a frequent visitor at the court; at such times W. was invited to sing there, and received great encouragement from the master, who took special delight in hearing his own German folk-songs interpreted by the actor-singer. In Oct., 1895, he gave his first song-recitals in Berlin with such overwhelming success that in the following year he definitely embraced the career of Lieder-singer. He then made tours of all Europe, arousing enthusiasm everywhere; his first recital in New York (Nov. 15, 1908) created a sensation, and was followed by numerous concerts in the principal cities of the U. S.; a second tour (1909–10) was equally successful. Although there are singers whom nature has gifted with a finer natural voice, there is none whose art exerts a more complete fascination. His irresistible power is due chiefly to his marvellous 'impersonation' of each song. So completely is he absorbed in, and so unfailingly does he reflect, the mood of poet and composer, that his delivery grips the hearer, and often thrills him more than many a dramatic representation with all the accessories of the operatic stage. No inconsiderable share of W.'s unusual success is due to the sympathy and rare art of Coenraad Bos (q. v.), his assisting artist at the piano.

His importance as a musicologist rests upon his researches concerning the life and works of Mozart, about whom he publ. new facts in La Jeunesse de Mozart ('Revue des Deux Mondes,' 1903–4), and especially in W. A. Mozart. Sa Vie et son Œuvre de l'Enfance à la pleine Maturité (with G. de Saint-Foix; 2 vols., 1911); it is the most valuable contribution to the Mozart literature since Jahn's biogr. Ysaÿe [ē-zah'ē], Eugène, famous violinist; b. Liège, July 16, 1858. At the age of 5 he began to study the violin with his father; then at the Cons. under M. Dupuis (harm.) and Rodolphe Massart (vl.), winning the second prize in 1867; 1873–5, pupil of Wieniawski at the Brussels Cons.; through the influence of Vieuxtemps, who heard him at Antwerp in 1876, he obtained a state stipend for further study under L. Massart at the Paris Cons. (until 1879); 1880–1, Konzertmeister of Bilse's orch. in Berlin, gaining his first experience as conductor. 1886–98, prof. of violin at the Brussels Cons.; 1894 he organized the 'Société des Concerts Y.', giving regular symphony concerts and establishing a considerable reputation, so that in 1898 (after Seidl's death) he was offered the conductorship of the N. Y. Philh. Soc., which he declined. He began his tours as a violinist in 1879, appearing in several cities of Germany without attracting unusual attention; a tour of Scandinavia in 1881 was more successful, while his reception in Paris (1883) was such as to induce him to take up his residence there (until 1886). His great fame dates from his first tour of England (1889), while on his first visit to the U. S. (Amer. début with N. Y. Philh. Soc., Nov. 16, 1894 [Beethoven concerto]) he created a sensation. At all times Y. cultivated ensemble-playing; his sonata-recitals with Pugno rivalled in popularity his appearances as soloist; years of constant practice with his own quartet in Brussels (Y., Marchot, Van Hout, J. Jacob) had developed a splendid ensemble, but when he played 1st vl. with other quartets his dominating personality invariably produced a lack of balance. Although he has visited America many times, he was not heard as a conductor until 1918, when he directed, with immense success, 2 concerts of the Cincinnati Symph. Orch. (April 5, 6) and the annual Cincinnati Fest. (May 7–10); thereupon he was eng. as permanent cond. (succ. Dr. Ernst Kunwald). —With a brilliant, flawless technic and a large, sympathetic tone Y. combines grandeur of conception and depth of penetration. His fiery temperament is at all times under perfect control, so that his frequent employment of 'tempo rubato' (really a subtle modification of tempo), instead of distorting the rhythm, produces a certain elastic freedom which renders his playing irresistible. His general style is best described as heroic; but his art is equally convincing in the expression of moods of exquisite delicacy and tenderness.—He has publ. for vl. and pf. 3 mazourkas, Poème élégiaque, Chant d'Hiver, Rêve d'Enfant; in MS., 6 vl.-concertos, vars. on a theme of Paganini's, 2 trios for 2 vls. and vla.

In 1565 he succeeded his fellow-pupil Cipriano de Rore as maestro di cappella at San Marco, holding this position until his death. He likewise held the office of chaplain at San Severo. To obtain the former post, Z. must have been a composer of eminence; Foscarini, indeed, terms him 'the famous regenerator of music in all Italy'; but most of his MSS. have been either lost or stolen, as his only extant compositions are 21 Modulationes a 6 (Venice, 1566; edited by Z.'s pupil, Usberti); 3 Lecciones pro mortuis (part of a coll. of motets a 4 by de Rore et al.; publ. by Scotto, 1563), and a mass (MS. in library of the Liceo Filarmonico, Bologna). 2 Motets a 5 were publ. by L. The above, together with several non-musical treatises, are in his collected works (1589; 4 vols.). His most important work, Istituzioni, was transl. into French by J. Lefort, into Dutch by J. P. Sweelinck (Z.'s pupil) and into German by J. K. Trost (all in MS.). H. Expert is preparing a new ed. of the original, with translation and commentary.—Bibliography: G. Ravagnan, *Elogio di G. Zeisler [tsīs-], Fannie Bloomfield, eminent pianist; b. Bielitz, Austrian Silesia, July 16, 1863; in 1868 her parents went to America and settled in Chicago, which has been her home ever since. Her first teachers were Bernhard Ziehn and Carl Wolfsohn; in 1876 she already played in public; in 1878 (on Mme. Essipov's recommendation) she went to Leschetizky, at Vienna, with whom she studied 5 years; several concerts given there in 1883 were highly successful. From 1883–93 she appeared on the American concert-stage every season, playing with all the prominent orchestras in the U. S.; in 1893 she made a pianistic tour to Berlin, Vienna, Leipzig, Dresden, etc., her success being so great that she was eng. for a longer tour of Germany, Switzerland and Scandinavia in 1894–5, winning triumphs upon triumphs. In 1895–6 she gave 50 concerts in the U. S., and in the autumn of 1897 made her first tour of the Pacific coast with brilliant success. In the spring of 1898, a tour of Great Britain and France served to confirm the unanimous verdict of the American and European press, that she was one of the greatest among contemporary pianists; she then accepted a special invitation to appear at the Nether-Rhenish Music Fest. of that year (Cologne, May 29–31). In 1902–3 she revisited Germany, Austria and France. In Paris, at a Lamoureux concert (Nov. 23, 1902) a clique had been organized to prevent her appearance; preserving her self-command, and ignoring the hostile demonstrations, Mme. Z. gave such an impassioned interpretation of Saint-Saëns's C minor concerto (op. 44) that at the end the opposition joined in the general frantic applause. Her next European tour was in 1911–2; the last (spring, 1914) was cut short by the war. In the U. S. her annual visits to the larger cities of the East and Middle West are regarded as events of prime importance; her first Pacific tour was followed by 2 others in 1902 and 1913. On Oct. 18, 1885, she married Sigmund Zeisler, a prominent lawyer of Chicago. She is honorary member of numerous clubs.—Her prominent place among the pianists of the first order was won in a comparatively short time. After the European triumphs of 1894–5 she was unanimously acclaimed the equal of Essipov, Menter and Carreño; and since then her art has maintained itself at that exalted level. With characteristic modesty she herself once remarked that her specialty is 'being no specialist.' Works by classicists, romanticists and modernists are interpreted by her with whole-hearted appreciation and enthusiasm.

Zimbalist [zĭm′-], Efrem, eminent violinist; b. Rostov, on the Don, Russia, April 9, 1889 [correct date; in letter to Ed.]. Began to study the violin with his father, Aaron Z., an orchl. cond.; 1901–7, at the Petrograd Cons. under Leopold Auer, graduating as winner of the gold medal and a scholarship of 1200 roubles. At his début in Berlin, Nov. 7, 1907 (Brahms concerto with the Philh. Orch.), he leaped into fame, the critics unanimously declaring him a star of the first magnitude; a month later he created a similar sensation in London, and within a year most of the musical centres of Europe had heard him, and endorsed the estimate of the Berlin critics. For his Amer. début with the Boston Symph. Orch. (Oct. 27, 1911) he was unfortunate in his choice of Glazunov's A minor concerto, op. 82, a dull and lengthy work (which, incidentally, on that occasion had its first perf. in America); in spite of this handicap his superior qualities as an executant and interpreter were recognized, and before the completion of his first season he had become an established favorite. The greater part of the next 3 years he spent in the U. S., appearing with all the important orchestras, at festivals and in numerous recitals; since the outbreak of the war he has not left this country. On June 15, 1914, he married the soprano Alma Gluck (q. v.) in London. A fine pianist, he has frequently been heard as accompanist at his wife's recitals.—Z.'s most striking quality is his extraordinary maturity; this explains his phenomenal success. A boy of 18 not merely overcoming the technical difficulties, but mastering the contents of the immense Brahms concerto, was something so novel that the critics were swept off their feet. In Z.'s case no allowance was ever made for his youth; from the beginning he was measured by the highest artistic standard.—He has comp. Slavic Dances for vl. and orch., Suite in the Old Style for vl. and pf., and songs.

Among his many pupils were Alkan, Marmontel, Prudent, Ravina, Lacombe, Dejazet, Lefebvre, Ambroise Thomas, etc.—Works: 3-act comic opera l'Enlèvement (Opéra-Comique, 1830); 2 pf.-concertos; a pf.-sonata, op. 5; 24 Études, op. 21; Les délices de Paris, a book of contredanses w. variations; rondos, fantasias, etc., f. pf.; 6 colls. of vocal romances, w. pf.-accomp.; and his chief work, the great Encyclopédie du Pianiste, a complete method for piano, Part iii of which is a treatise on harmony and counterpoint.—Cf. Zingarel'li [tsĭn-], Nicola Antonio, celebrated composer of dramatic and sacred music; b. Naples, April 4, 1752; d. Torre del Greco, n. Naples, May 5, 1837. A student at the Cons. di Loreto, where Fenaroli was his teacher in composition, from 1759–69, he completed his studies under Speranza. His first opera, I quattro pazzi, prod. at the Cons. in 1768, was followed by Montezuma (Teatro San Carlo, 1781); neither had much success, and he was obliged to support himself by lesson-giving until Alsinda, prod. at La Scala, Milan, in 1785, brought him fame and commissions; altogether he produced 34 operas, among which Giulietta e Romeo (Milan, La Scala, Jan. 30, 1796) is considered his masterpiece. He spent much of his time in journeying from place to place for the rehearsal and production of his operas. In 1792 he was app. maestro di cappella at Milan Cathedral; in 1794, at the 'Santa Casa' in Loreto; and in 1804, at St. Peter's, Rome. In all these positions he wrote a great deal of church-music. In 1811, for refusing to conduct a Te Deum to celebrate the birthday of Napoleon's son, the 'King of Rome,' he was imprisoned at Civitavecchia, and later transported to Paris by order of Napoleon, who set him at liberty and liberally paid him for a mass written in Paris. As Fioravanti had meanwhile become maestro at St. Peter's, Z. repaired to Naples, and in 1813 became Director of the royal 'Collegio di Musica'; in 1816 he succeeded Paisiello as maestro at the Cathedral. As Director he was very conservative in his views, and displayed little energy; but as a teacher he had excellent success, among his pupils being Bellini, Mercadante, Carlo Conti, Lauro Rossi and Morlacchi. His operas, interpreted by the finest singers of the time (Catalani, Crescentini, Grassini, Marchesi and Rubinelli), had immense vogue. He wrote a vast amount of church-music, much appreciated in Italy, more particularly the collection 'Annuale di Zingarelli' (or 'Annuale di Loreto'), a series of masses for every day in the year (there are 38 f. male ch. and orch., about 20 solemn masses, 7 f. double choir, 66 with organ, 25 a 2–3 w. orch., etc.); also a 4-part Miserere 'alla Palestrina' (1827); furthermore, 73 Magnificats, 28 Stabat Maters, 21 Credos, many Te Deums, motets, hymns, etc.; 3 oratorios; also solfeggi, arias, organ-sonatas, a string-quartet, etc.—Cf. precocious, she graduated from the Cons. there at the age of 12, having completed courses in pf., vl. and comp.; after a serious illness, due to overwork, her voice was discovered, and after only 6 months' study under Bennet she made her operatic début as Selika in Barcelona (T. de las Novedades, Mar. 4, 1899 [at 14!]); until 1913 she sang with great succ., chiefly in Italy and South America, appearing also in France, England, Russia, Germany and Austria; after 3 years' retirement she reappeared on the stage at the M. O. H. as Lucia (Jan. 31, 1916), and has sung there every season since. Her voice, ranging from *c–f*³, is rather weak, but very sympathetic; she has won success through her perfect vocal technic, thorough musicianship and fascinating personality. Her répertoire of 20 rôles is drawn from works of Rossini, Donizetti, Verdi, Meyerbeer, A. Thomas, Delibes, Flotow and Mozart, the latter being her favorite composer.

Bloch, Ernest. In 1909–10 he was cond. of the subscription concerts at Lausanne and Neuchâtel, and from 1911–5 prof. of comp. and esthetics at the Geneva Cons. In 1916 he came to America as cond. of Maud Allen's tour; in 1917 he settled in New York as teacher of comp. at the David Mannes' Sch. of Music. Shortly after his arrival the performance of his str.-quartet by the Flonzaleys (N. Y., Dec. 29, 1916) attracted more than usual attention, and Dr. Muck invited the composer to conduct his Poèmes juifs at 2 concerts of the Boston S. O. (Mar. 23–4, 1917); the Soc. of Friends of Music arranged a special concert of B.'s works, cond. by Bodanzky (N. Y., May 3, 1917). Musicians were struck by the pronounced individuality of the new composer. After hearing the first Symphony in C♯ m. in Geneva (1910),

R. Rolland called it 'one of the most important works of the modern school,' music in which 'a rich, vigorous, passionate temperament makes itself felt.' This same vigor characterizes all B.'s music, although the passion is not on the surface. The works inspired by Jewish subjects possess a distinct racial flavor, even when the composer does not employ specific Hebrew themes; in them he strives to give expression to the ideals and aspirations of the race. In his thematic development and the employment of all the resources of the modern orchestra he shows consummate mastery.—Publ. works: Hiver-Printemps, symph. poem; Trois Poèmes juifs (Danse, Rite, Cortège funèbre) for orch.; Schelomo [Solomon], rhapsody for vcl. and orch.; str.-quartet in B; Poèmes d'Automne (La Vagabonde, l'Abri, Le Déclin, Invocation) for m.-sop. and orch.; Psalm 22 for bar. and orch.; Psalm 114 for sop. and orch.; Psalm 137 for do.—In MS.: An opera, Macbeth (Paris, Op.-Com., Nov. 30, 1910); Symphony in C♯ m.; do. in F, Israel; Symphonie orientale (on Hebrew themes); Vivre et Aimer, symph. poem, Orientale for orch. He is now (1918) writing a second opera, Jézabel, on a text by Édouard Fleg.

Bodanzky, Artur. In 1917 he publ. a new ed. of Weber's Oberon; he reduced the number of stage-pictures to 7, eliminated some minor characters, comp. the recitatives and added 15 new recitatives [Engl. tr. by Dr. Th. Baker] connecting the original set numbers. This version is to be prod. at the M. O. H. in 1918–9.

Bonnet [bŏh-nā'], Joseph, distinguished organist; b. Bordeaux, Mar. 17, 1884. Pupil of his father, organist at Ste.-Eulalie; his progress was so rapid that at 14 he was app. regular org. at St.-Nicolas, and soon after at St.-Michel, where his recitals attracted considerable attention; he then ent. the class of Guilmant at the Paris Cons., graduating with the 1st prize; having also won the 'Grand Prix Alexandre Guilmant,' he entered, in 1906, the competition for the coveted post of org. at St.-Eustache (all competitors being 'premiers prix' of the Cons.), and received the appointment, which he still (1918) holds. Succ. tours of France, Belgium England, Switzerland, Germany, Austria and Hungary rapidly won him international reputation; in 1911 he also became Guilmant's successor as org. of the Concerts du Cons. His Amer. début, on the grand organ of the College of the City of N. Y. (Jan. 30, 1917), was an emphatic success, and was followed by extended tours of the U. S. during that year and the next; special interest was aroused by his series of 5 historical recitals (Hotel Astor, N. Y., Dec., 1917; repeated by request in other cities), illustrating the development of organ-music from the precursors of Bach to the present. Among the world's great organists of to-day B. has no superior, and but few equals. His memory is prodigious; in 1910–1 he gave at St.-Eustache more than 40 recitals without repeating a single number. He is F. R. C. O., hon. mem. A. G. O., do. Amer. Organ Players' Club (Phila.), etc. He has also made for himself a prominent place among modern composers for the organ.—Works: Op. 1, Variations de Concert for org.; op. 2, Ave Maria for ch. and org.; op. 3, Poèmes d'Automne for org. (1. Chant des Chrysanthèmes, 2. Matin provençal, 3. Poème du Soir); op. 4, songs (MS.); op. 5, Douze Pièces pour Grand Orgue (1. Prélude, 2. Lamento, 3. Toccata, 4. Nocturne, 5. Ave Maris Stella, 6. Rêverie, 7. Intermezzo, 8. Fantaisie sur 2 Noëls, 9. Épithalame, 10. Légende symphonique, 11. Canzona, 12. Rapsodie catalane); op. 6, motets (1. Ave Maria for sop. solo and org.; 2. Agnus Dei for bar. solo, 3-part ch. and org.; 3. O Salutaris for solo-quartet and org.); op. 7, Douze Pièces pour Grand Orgue [orig. publ. as Douze Pièces nouvelles] (1. Dédicace, 2. Étude de Concert, 3. Clair de Lune, 4. Stella matutina, 5. Songe d'Enfant, 6. Chant de Printemps, 7. Prélude au "Salve Regina," 8. Romance sans Paroles, 9. Pastorale, 10. Deuxième Légende, 11. Elfes, 12. Caprice héroïque); op. 8, Pater Noster for ten. solo and org.; op. 9, Concerto for org. and orch. He possesses a perfectly trained voice of extraordinary power and unusual compass ($B\flat^1$-g^1), enabling him to sing basso profundo and baritone with the same ease. Equally convincing as a singer and actor, his splendid physique (he is over 6 feet) makes him an ideal interpreter of Wagner's heroes. He created König Neiding in Hösel's Wieland der Schmied (Charlottenburg, Dec., 1912) and Thoas in the Amer. première of Gluck's Iphigenie auf Tauris (M. O. Carreño, (Maria) Teresa, one of the world's great pianists; b. Caracas, Venezuela, Dec. 22, 1853; d. New York, June 12, 1917. Her talent showed itself at the age of 4, but her father, an excellent pianist, did not begin systematic instruction until she was 6; at 8 she played Thalberg's difficult fantasy on Norma and similar brilliant concert-pieces in vogue at the time. Her father, Manuel Antonio C., was minister of Finance, and his house the gathering-place of all local and visiting musical celebrities. At the frequent soirées Teresa's finished execution and unusual power of improvisation aroused general admiration. Driven from home by a revolution, the family settled in New York in August, 1862. Gottschalk had heard of the wonder-child, called, and persuaded the father to exhibit the new prodigy. On Nov. 7, 1862, the first semi-public concert took place at Irving Hall before an invited audience of musicians and representatives of the press; the result was the arrangement of 6 concerts, at one of which Theo. Thomas was the assisting artist. The first of these—her real début—was given at the same hall on Nov. 25, with overwhelming success; the steady increase in attendance at each succeeding appearance necessitated the engagement of the large Acad. of Music for the final concert (Dec. 22), which was attended by 4000 persons. Immediately she was eng. for 2 concerts in Boston, where she was first heard at Music Hall on Jan. 1, 1863; instead of the 2 concerts, she was obliged to give 12, and by March had also been heard in 12 more concerts in the chief Eastern cities. At the invitation of Karl Zerrahn, the cond. of the Boston Philh. Soc., she made her début with orch. there in Jan., 1863, arousing a furore with Mendelssohn's Capriccio brillante (which she had prepared in 3 days). In April and May she played with similar success in Havana. After these early triumphs she resumed serious study with Gottschalk, continuing occasional public appearances. From 1865–74 she toured Germany, France, Spain and England; in Paris she studied for a time with Georges Mathias and, at a later period, with Rubinstein. In Edinburgh she made an unexpected operatic début as the Queen in Les Huguenots (May 24, 1872), in a cast that included Tietjens, Brignoli and Mario. Col. Mapleson had planned a gala performance in honor of the Queen's birthday; a few days before the event the artist cast for the Queen became sick; M., unable to secure a substitute, and firmly convinced that C.'s musicianship, fine natural voice and great personal beauty would save the day, overcame her objections; in 4 days she learned the part, and sang (under an assumed name) with brilliant success. After her return to the U. S. in 1875 she st. singing with Hermine Rudersdorff in Boston, made her Amer. début as a singer in Don Giovanni (Zerlina), and continued on the operatic stage for some years. On the Bolívar centenary celebration (1883) she appeared in Caracas as singer, pianist and composer of the festival hymn, written at the request of the govt. [Hence the oft-repeated statement that C. wrote the national hymn of Venezuela. Gloria al bravo pueblo (words by V. Salías, music by J. Landaeta) was comp. in 1811, and officially adopted as the national anthem on May 25, 1881]. Next year she appeared there again in a company of which her husband (the baritone Giov. Tagliapietra) was manager; after the sudden departure of both conductors she wielded the bâton for the remaining 3 weeks of the season. Thenceforth her entire time was devoted to the piano. Upon her reappearance in Germany (tour of 1889–90) she was unanimously recognized as one of the master-pianists, and her numerous tours of Europe and America were a succession of uninterrupted triumphs; her last appearance with orch. was with the N. Y. Philh. Soc. (Dec. 8, 1916), her last recital, in Havana (Mar. 21, 1917). Her publ. comps. (all written in early life) consist of a str.-quartet in B, Petite Danse tsigane for orch., and a number of brilliant concert-pcs. for pf. (39 op.-numbers); a waltz, Mi Teresita, has won great popularity, and was publ. in numerous arrs.—C. was married 4 times. In 1872 she married Émile Sauret, the violinist; about 1875, the baritone Giovanni Tagliapietra; from 1892–5 she was the wife of Eugen d'Albert; her last husband, Arturo Tagliapietra, a younger brother of Giov., she married on June 30, 1902. Of her 5 children two (both by Giov. T.) have made a reputation as musicians: (1) Teresita, b. New Rochelle, N. Y., Dec. 24, 1883; pupil of her mother, of Josef Hofman (Berlin) and Moszkowski (Paris); début Stockholm, 1901; since then tours of Scandinavia, Germany, Russia and England. (2) Giovanni, b. New Rochelle, Jan. 7, 1885; st. singing with Villa in Rome; début as baritone, later developing into a tenor; has been singing chiefly in Italy.—C.'s career, extending over more than half a century, appears like the reflex, in a single individual, of the evolution of piano-playing during that period. At the beginning she was entirely the child of the time; her instantaneous early success was won though her dazzling technical feats at a time when mere virtuosity was the highest aim of the pianist. As the interpretative school of Chopin-Schumann-Liszt gradually supplanted the older virtuoso-school of Hummel-Moscheles-Thalberg, C.'s art developed along the same lines, at first instinctively, later consciously; in fact, from somewhere about 1895 she was one of the most influential factors contributing toward the recent perfection of touch and tonal shading. A player in the 'grand style,' she was especially famous for her masculine vigor in the interpretation of the heroic or the colossal, which earned her the appellation of 'the Valkyrie' or 'the Brünnhilde' of the piano. But if in her loftier moments she swept her hearers off their feet, she enchanted them in her moments of grace and tenderness. For penetrating insight, reverence for the composer, sheer beauty of tone and infinite variety of tone-color she has never been excelled.—For her share in securing early appreciation of MacDowell (her pupil) see the article M., p. 562.

Carrillo [kăhr-rĭl'yô], Julián, b. Ahualulco, San Luis Potosí, Mexico, Jan., 1875. From 1885–95 he st. with F. Carlos; then at the Cons. Nacional, Mexico City (1895–9), pupil of P. Manzano (vl.) and M. Morales (comp.); grad. as winner of a special prize offered by President Díaz, which enabled him to spend 5 years in Europe: 1899–1902, at the Leipzig Cons. under Hans Becker (vl.), Jadassohn (comp.) and Hans Sitt (orch.), playing at the same time in the Gewandhaus orch. under Nikisch; 1902–4, at the Ghent Cons., winning the 1st prize for vl. After a concert-tour through Mexico (1906–7) he settled in Mexico City; taught comp. at the Cons. (1907–8); insp.-general of music (1908–12); since 1912 dir. of the Cons.; in 1909 he organized the Beethoven Symph. Orch. and the B. Quartet; in 1914 he gave a number of orchl. concerts in New York, introducing some of his comps.—Works: A 4-act opera Mathilda, and a 1-act do., Ossian (not prod.); 2 symphonies (D and C); 2 suites for orch. (F and E m.); pf.-quintet in E♭; str.-sextet in G; str.-quartet in E♭; 2 masses for soli, ch. and orch. (F and C); a Requiem for do. Heifetz, Jascha, remarkable violinist; b. Vilna, 1899. At the age of 3 he had his first lessons from his father, Ruben H., a good violinist; his progress was so extraordinary that after little more than a year he was admitted to the Imp. Music School at Vilna, where he played in recitals before he was 5; at 6 he made his début at Kovno, playing Mendelssohn's Concerto before an audience of more than 1000 and arousing frantic demonstrations; cont. his studies in Vilna till 1907, when he ent. the Petrograd Cons., studying répertoire and interpretation under Auer; even before he left the Cons. he frequently appeared in public, drawing crowded houses. His phenomenal successes in Berlin, (1912; with the Philh. Soc. under Nikisch, etc.) were duplicated in Vienna (1913) and the musical centres of Germany (1914); after the declaration of war he toured Russia and Scandinavia; his Amer. début (N. Y., Oct. 27, 1917), was followed by a triumphant tour of the States. Not yet 20, he is unanimously ranked with the greatest living masters of the violin; Auer regards his precocity as remarkable as that of Mozart or Mendelssohn.

Heinrich, Anthony Philip [Anton Philipp], b. Schönbüchel, Bohemia, Mar. 11, 1781; d. in extreme poverty in New York, May 3, 1861. As a boy he acquired proficiency on the pf. and vl., but began life as a wholesale merchant and banker; having failed in business, he went to Bardstown, Ky., where, without any knowledge of harm., he began to compose in 1818; these first songs and instrl. pcs. he publ. later as Op. 1, The Dawning of Music in Kentucky, or The Pleasures of Harmony in the Solitudes of Nature. From 1827–34 he was in London, playing vl. in a small orch.; there he also st. theory, and about 1830 began to write for orch.; in 1834 he visited Germany and Austria, and had some of his works prod. at Dresden, Prague and Graz; in Vienna he ent. a competition with a symphony, but the prize was awarded to Franz Lachner; disappointed, he returned to America and settled in New York, where he soon gained immense popularity, so that he was generally known as 'Father H.'; during the 40's and 50's he was a commanding figure in the musical affairs of the U. S., publishing hundreds of pf.-pcs. and songs, grand festivals of his works being arranged in N. Y., Philadelphia and Boston, and the critics speaking of him as the 'Beethoven of America'; a tour of Germany in 1857–8 was a dismal failure. The quality of his works easily accounts for the speedy and complete oblivion of even his name; he wrote only for an enormous orch., à la Berlioz, and his musical ideas, out of all proportion to the means employed, recall the style of Haydn's imitators; nevertheless, he is historically important, being the first to employ Indian themes in works of large dimensions and to show decided nationalist aspirations. In 1917 O. G. Sonneck acquired for the Libr. of Congress H.'s 'Memoranda' (letters, programs, newspaper-clippings, etc.), many publ. works and almost all the orchl. scores (in MS.; many autograph) enumerated in a list made by H. himself in 1857. A perusal of the titles is amusing and instructive: The Columbiad, Grand Amer. Chivalrous Symphony; The Columbiad, or Migration of Amer. Wild Passenger Pigeons, a Characteristic Symph.; Hommage à la Bohème, grande symph. bohémienne; The Hunters of Kentucky, sinfonia di caccia; The Indian Carnival, or The Indian's Festival of Dreams. Sinfonia eratico-fantaschia (sic!); The Indian War Council. Gran concerto bellico for 41 instrl. parts; The Jägers Adieu. Scored for 32 instrs.; Concerto grosso 'Johannisberg,' or The Festival of the Vintagers on the Rhine; Manitou Mysteries, or The Voice of the Great Spirit. Gran sinfonia misteriosa indiana; The Mastodon, a Grand Symph. in 3 Parts; The Ornithological Combat of Kings, or The Condor of the Andes and the Eagle of the Cordilleras. A Grand Symph.; Pocahontas, the Royal Indian Maid and the Heroine of Virginia, the Pride of the Wilderness. Fantasia romanza; To the Spirit of Beethoven, the Monumental Symph.; A Grand Oratorical
